The Carmel Pine Cone

November 9, 1978 Two sections 25 cents

PLUMES OF DUST rose each time a wave crashed against the exposed cliff at Cooke's Cove in Carmel last year. In February, pounding surf put a crack in the protective seawall and later a 125-foot section toppled into the sea. Repair work has been delayed so long that city works crews will not be able to rebuild the wall until next spring. Part of the blame went to delays from federal authorities and still more to the fact city works crews have to be pulled from the job when other work has to be done. (George T. C. Smith photo)

Will the sea reach Scenic?

Seawall won't be restored before storms hit; inquiry finds the job was illegally assigned to city workmen

By JIM BARRETT

HOLDING BACK the sea at Cooke's Cove in Carmel has become a race against bad weather. The north cliff of the V-shaped cove at 13th Avenue and Scenic Road is exposed and vulnerable to a high tide.

It was high tides that brought down the wall in February. Pounding surf, lashed by a series of storms, put a vertical crack in the concrete wall, a small part then slumped into the surging water, unsettling a larger 125-foot section. Workmen later found the water had cut under the wall where they found a gap in its natural foundation of sandstone.

Rain is in the long-range forecast for Thanksgiving, now only two weeks away. City crews only will have time to fill the 30-foot gap with concrete and pour a new base for the replacement wall that will be added next spring. Rip rap, broken chunks of concrete, will be piled at the base of the exposed cliff to deflect high tides, according to William Askew Jr., city director of public works who is supervising the work.

"We'll build whatever we can build before the winter storms. You can't battle the elements," Askew said.

Work on the seawall started shortly after Oct. 5, when $146,428 in disaster aid was freed for the project. Whether the cliff will make it through the upcoming storms is anyone's guess.

IT IS REASONABLE to ask, however, why the work didn't start sooner so both the base and the seawall itself could have been completed before winter.

Two answers are given by city officials. Federal disaster aid was not promised until October. And the other: a recurring need to pull city workers off the seawall job for others that popped up elsewhere.

"Naturally, I can't work on it all the time," Askew said of the seawall repair. "When emergencies come up, I have to put crews on that."

What Carmel did—putting its own employees on the seawall job—was illegal. The project should have been put out to bid. Jack Collins, the city administrator, freely admits it.

He said construction companies in the area have enough work. "If they were hungry and needed the work, then we'd probably get sued," Collins said.

By doing the work itself, the city saved money that otherwise would be spent to draw up construction specifications, he said. Asked how big a savings he thought Carmel made, Collins replied, "Hundreds of thousands of dollars."

A check with the state Office of Emergency Services in Sacramento showed that its officials see nothing wrong with the city doing the work. The office channels federal disaster relief to cities in California. The grant is not given as a lump sum and the amount needed may be less than authorized, depending on the cost of materials and the hours of labor involved.

But the Government Code states that any public works project with a value of more than $5,000 must be contracted by public bid. Street repair and maintenance is excluded.

TWO-THIRDS OF the $146,428 Carmel is eligible for would be used to reimburse the city for the wages of its workers at the seawall.

To verify Collins' contention that they were not "hungry," executives at two major construction companies were asked if they would have bid on the seawall repair job. They both said yes.

"I have over 150 people working here who have families and house payments to make. I have millions of dollars worth of equipment and it's all got to move," said John Douglas of Granite Construction Co. He is the branch manager of the Monterey Bay region.

"We bid everything," he said flatly.

Muriel Calabrese of Phil Calabrese Construction Co. said virtually the same thing.

"We bid on anything that's sent out to bid," she said.

Douglas preferred to talk "off the record," in most cases, but during an interview at his Seaside office, he said he would strongly admonish Carmel and that he will take formal action if Carmel skips the bidding process again.

Douglas did not know about the project

PROGRESS ON the repair work, as it stood in late October, still left some important work to be completed. Once pumped of the seawater, the gap in the sandstone (right part of photo) will be filled with concrete. An improved footing will be laid and rip rap, piled against the cliff, will be sloped to deflect high tides. Whether the work will withstand the storms, however, is anyone's guess.

Mello urges compromises in Carmel 'Heritage City' plan

ASSEMBLYMAN HENRY J. Mello has said Carmel Mayor Gunnar Norberg's "Heritage City" plan for a regional government is too far-reaching to be established by legislation alone. A legislative analyst warned two weeks ago that parts of the plan were unconstitutional.

But Mello, a Watsonville Democrat who represents Carmel, said the goal of the plan—increased control of new development—could be achieved if Monterey County supervisors were elected countywide instead of by district.

Norberg introduced his Heritage City plan in 1971. Put in action, it would remove 593 square miles in Carmel Valley and along the coast from the jurisdiction of the county supervisors. The single square mile of Carmel city also would be included. A consultant to the Assembly Committee on Local Government, John G. Tennyson, issued a report two weeks ago that said several Heritage City provisions would be unconstitutional. Tennyson examined the plan at Mello's request.

"I couldn't introduce the present proposal. It has too many conflicts," Mello said in an interview last week.

"Everything Gunnar desires can't come about. For instance, the 20-year residency requirement for elected officials and the prohibition of chain stores," he said. The Heritage City Council would be composed of five members with varying lengths of residency of up to 20 years.

REFORMS IN supervisorial elections might achieve the principal goal of the "Heritage City" plan, Assemblyman Henry J. Mello said. He indicated he would not introduce legislation to establish the plan unless it was significantly modified.

Instead, Mello suggested a change in the way county supervisors run for office. "I get a lot of phone calls from people in Carmel Valley and the Carmel area who are concerned about the 3-2 votes that have placed so many projects in their area," he said.

The county supervisors often split 3-2 on land use decisions. There are two supervisors from the Monterey Peninsula and three from the Salinas Valley or rapidly developing North County. Each is elected within his individual district.

ONE WAY TO come about the Heritage City goal is to introduce a law that allows general law counties like Monterey to put a measure on the ballot about whether supervisors should be elected by district or countywide. Those who live and represent North County or Salinas or King City, they would have to campaign then on the Monterey Peninsula," Mello said.

Mello also said Heritage City backers could reject the change in election procedure and establish a board of freeholders that would develop and establish a charter for the area and put it to a vote. If approved, the charter would establish a city with all the normal power over land use and zoning matters.

A freeholder can be any person who lives within the area that would be incorporated. Under state law, a board of 15 would be appointed, Mello said. Some would live in the county, he said, and others would be from the city of Carmel.

Amendments to the state Constitution are difficult to pass, Mello said. He also expressed reluctance to do so simply to provide for the Heritage City concept.

"We are a nation of laws. We can't go against the U.S. and the state constitutions," he said. State constitutional amendments must be approved by two-thirds of the Senate and Assembly and passed by the voters.

Mello said he will attempt to schedule a town hall-type meeting in January to solicit opinions from those who live in the Heritage City area. Mello said he wanted to have Norberg and Tennyson on the panel with him.

As conceived by Norberg, Heritage City would cover the area between Pebble Beach and Big Sur. It also would include virtually all of Carmel Valley.

No cocktails at new restaurants

'Temperance' zoning suggested for downtown

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

ANY NEW RESTAURANTS that serve cocktails would be confined to 11 square blocks downtown under a plan backed by a majority of the Carmel Planning Commission. Given the geography of the area, no more than 10 liquor-serving restaurants could operate there. The zoning proposal, in effect, would prevent any additional restaurants from opening because there already are 10. The commission drafted the proposal with the intent of stopping the proliferation of restaurants that serve mixed drinks. Part of the proposal also bans additional liquor-serving restaurants outside the central district.

"Pretty soon the law books in this town will be so thick they'll have to drive them around in trucks," said one restaurant owner. He intends to obtain a license for cocktails, but was left wondering after learning about the new proposal. Restaurants that serve only beer and wine would not be affected.

Drafted by the land use subcommittee of the planning commission, the proposed ordinance quickly won the support of Robert Stephenson, its chairman. "If someone wants a stiff jolt in this town," he declared, "there are already lots of places to get it."

With Stephenson's support, the proposal has apparent majority backing. There are six planning commissioners. Three are on the subcommittee. Stephenson is not.

Next Wednesday, the proposal comes before the planning commission for a hearing. The meeting begins at 4 p.m. in City Hall.

New law still viewed as being too lenient

Restrictions have been drafted to require design review for two-story houses and new on-site parking requirements for all new Carmel homes. The restraints are aimed at tightening a home construction ordinance that some city officials say is not tough enough. The ordinance took effect Wednesday.

Still under study, the amendments to the R-1 residential district ordinance will be disclosed at a public hearing next Wednesday. They will affect both new houses and those remodeled Carmel homes.

Contractors who want to build a two-story house here or remodel existing ones would have to submit to a special design review under the proposal. The Carmel Planning Commission would have the final word in local two-story home construction.

The plan also puts some muscle behind residential parking requirements. Homeowners would have to supply 200-square-foot parking spaces for parking structures on their property.

Some commissioners have expressed doubts about the proposal. Commissioner Dr. Donald Davidson said he would be "uneasy" over the commission wielding such power. Robert Stephenson, the commission chairman, said he wants to give it "more thought."

A public hearing on the proposed amendments has been scheduled next Wednesday before the planning commission. It meets at 4 p.m. at City Hall.

Cliff fate shaky

until he was called by the Pine Cone. He said he once had similar problems with the Monterey County Public Works Department. "We looked at their inventory of equipment a year ago and found they had more blades than Granite Construction Co. I couldn't believe it," Douglas said.

"If a city as small as Carmel can do $150,000 worth of work, they have too much equipment and too many men on the payroll," he declared. "You can quote me."

LABOR REPRESENTATIVES seemed to be equally miffed about the seawall job. "I've never heard of something this big not being bid. Jobs for $20,000 or $30,000, yes, but not $150,000," said Gary Martin, business agent for the carpenter's union, a member of the Building and Construction Trades Council of Monterey County.

The secretary of the trades council, Leo E. Thiltgen, said he would complain to the state Department of Industrial Labor Relations.

Construction trades representatives disputed Collins' claim the city is saving money by not putting the project to bid. If any of the heavy equipment involved, in this case a loader and a backhoe, sits idle the rest of the year, the arrangement is not cost-efficient, they said.

Mrs. Calabrese said if a private firm gets a federal contract, it must pay its workers union scale wages and benefits and make sure 25 per cent of the workers are from ethnic minorities.

REGARDLESS OF the dispute over who does the work, there is the real possibility Scenic Road may be endangered by a series of storms.

The winding two-lane road fronts some of the most expensive homes on the California coast. At one point near the cove, the shoulder of Scenic is no more than a yard wide. Fill dirt removed for the repair work below has left a sheer 40-foot drop from the road to beach.

The lost seawall doubled as a retainer for the fill dirt. Since the wall won't be built this winter, Askew was asked if the cliff might erode and imperil Scenic Road.

"It's not as good as with a wall, but it made it through last winter," was his answer.

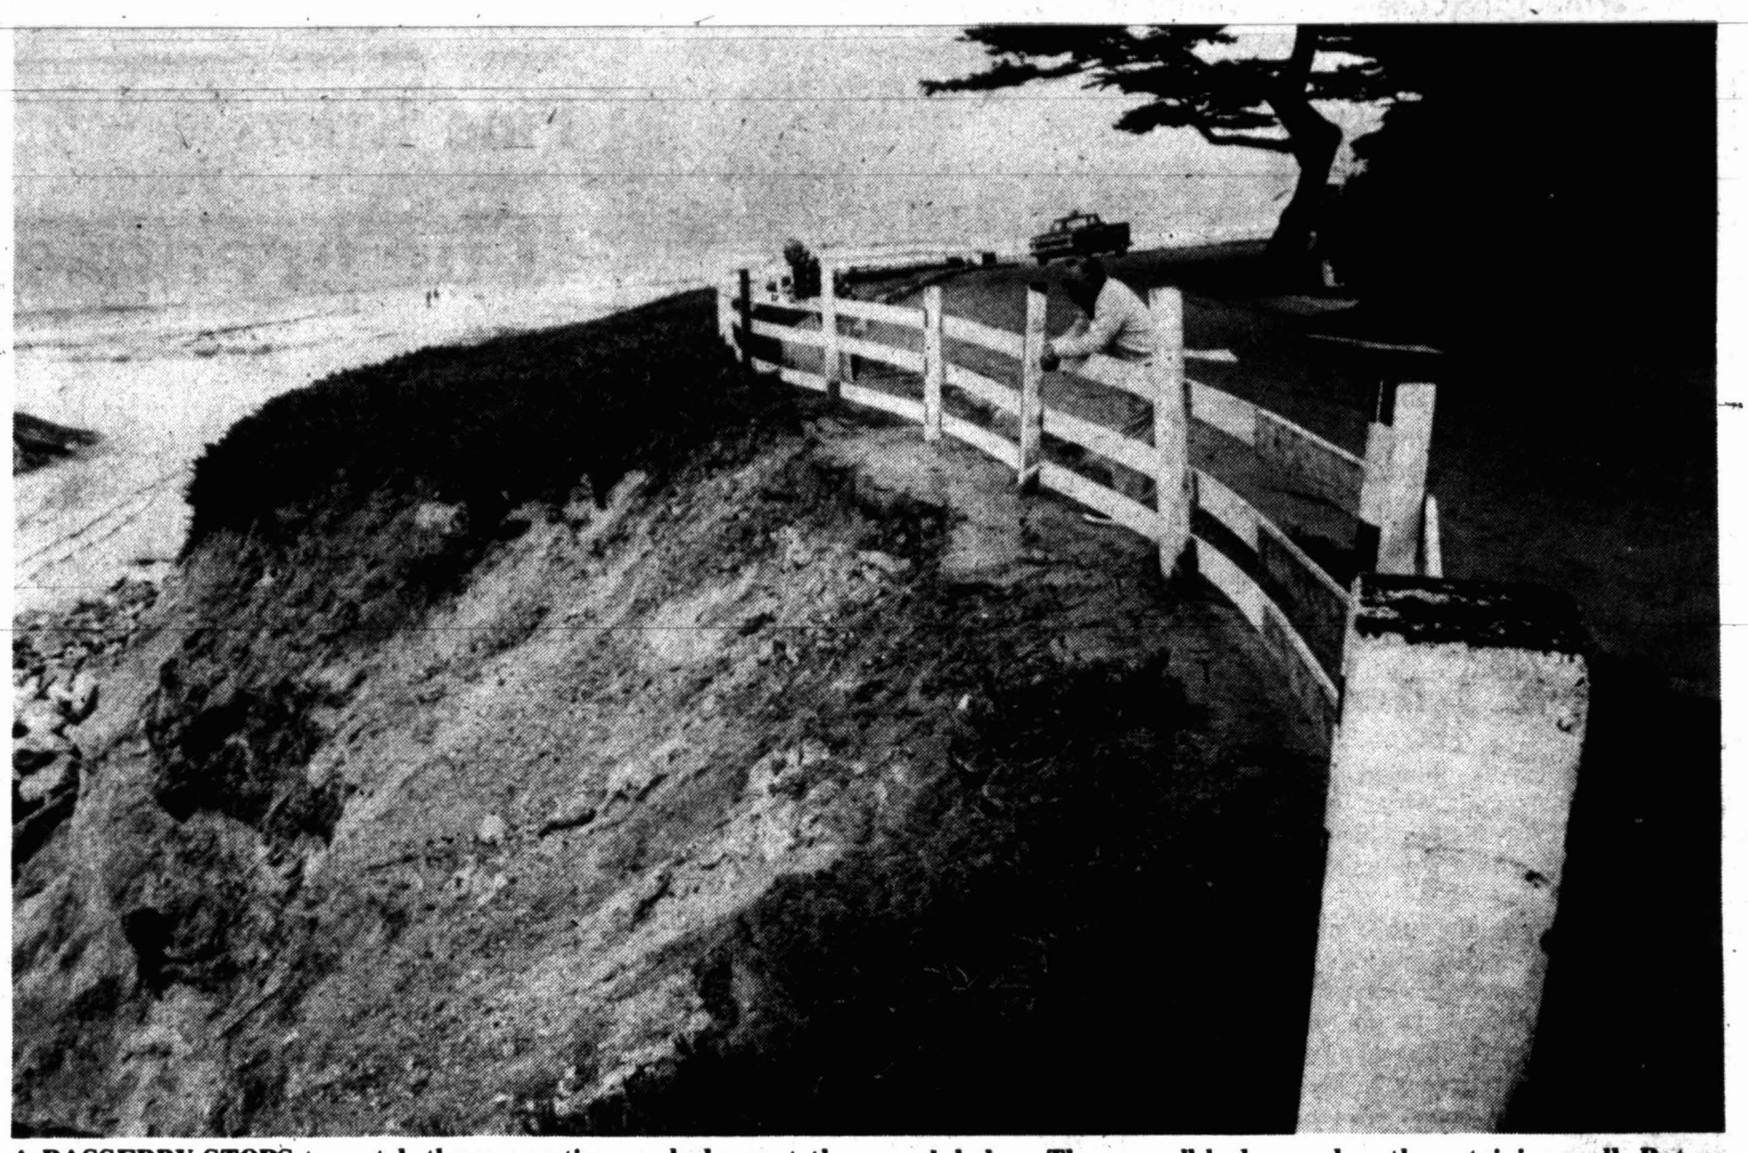
DIRT ON THE cliff had to be raked off with heavy equipment so the workmen could dig to the sandstone base of the cliff. In only one spot, the troublesome 30-foot gap, is the ground unstable. The sandstone is submerged below the sand there.



A PASSERBY STOPS to watch the excavation work down at the foot of 13th Avenue and Scenic Road. Where he is standing, the shoulder of Scenic Road is no more than one yard wide. Fill dirt held in a gradual slope against the cliff had to be removed for the repair work below. The seawall had served as the retaining wall. But no wall will be built until next spring, causing some to wonder if the exposed cliff, denuded of protective ice plant, will slide and cut into Scenic Road.

SEAWATER IS under the sand at Carmel Beach; sometimes it is no more than 10 feet down. Before a footing of concrete can be poured, the water must be sucked from below the cliffs at Cooke's Cove. One workman constantly must remove muck from the water so the pump doesn't get clogged.

Askew intends to bridge the gap by digging to the sandstone below and filling with concrete. The gap was the Achilles' heel of the previous seawall. Turbulent and prolonged high tides burrowed through the sand and under the seawall. With battering ram force, the waves put a vertical crack in the wall, the weak section slumped seaward and unsettled the wall 45 feet in each direction. Carmel public works crews deliberately toppled the section before it fell violently and caused a landslide.

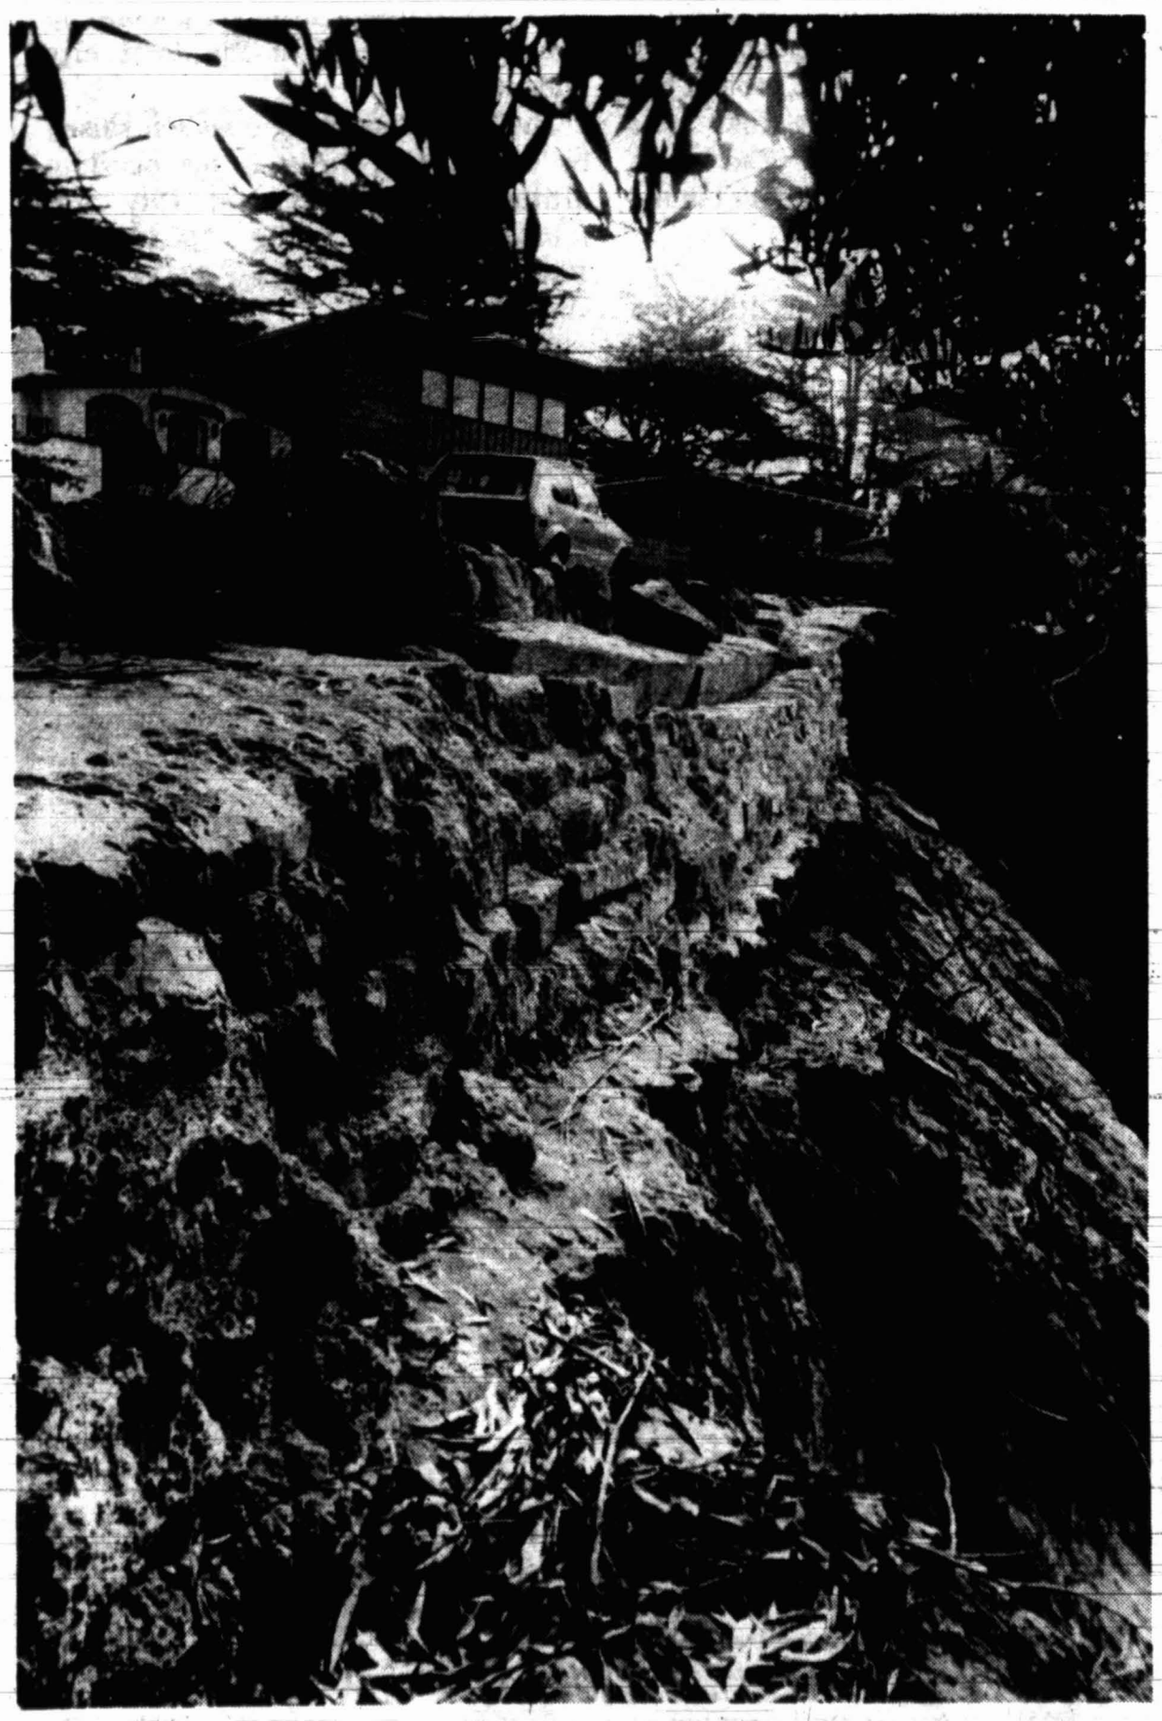
Photography by Michael Stang

Critics have called the seawall "Askew's Folly." They claim the base was not installed correctly the first time. (And the gap seems to prove their point.) But there were unusual circumstances they overlook.

"The ocean stayed high for six weeks straight," Askew said. "I'd never seen it that way before.

"With this fine sand, if water gets under the wall and into a seam, with that constant beating...well. This time we went a little stronger with it. You try to improve anything you do," he said.

Once excavated, the gap will be filled with boulders, some weighing as much as six tons. The spaces between the boulders will be filled with concrete. Rip rap will be spread along the base and piled to make a gentle slope up the cliff.



Cliffs vs. builder

ABOUT 100 yards north of Cooke's Cove along Scenic Road (left), slapping waves from last winter's storms also caused serious erosion that will have to be checked. In this case, erosion was hastened by hikers who have beaten a trail toward the beach below. When it falls, rain will cut grooves in the exposed soil and carry the dirt to the beach. (Right) William Askew Jr., whose father built some of the original seawall along Carmel Beach, said he is confident the stopgap repairs can be finished before serious rainstorms hit. Shown in the background is Cooke's Cove and the excavation work that precedes pouring a new footing for the seawall.

Cliff fate shaky

until he was called by the Pine Cone. He said he once had similar problems with the Monterey County Public Works Department. "We looked at their inventory of equipment a year ago and found they had more blades than Granite Construction Co. I couldn't believe it," Douglas said.

"If a city as small as Carmel can do $150,000 worth of work, they have too much equipment and too many men on the payroll," he declared. "You can quote me."

LABOR REPRESENTATIVES seemed to be equally miffed about the seawall job. "I've never heard of something this big not being bid. Jobs for $20,000 or $30,000, yes, but not $150,000," said Gary Martin, business agent for the carpenter's union, a member of the Building and Construction Trades Council of Monterey County.

The secretary of the trades council, Leo E. Thiltgen, said he would complain to the state Department of Industrial Labor Relations.

Construction trades representatives disputed Collins' claim the city is saving money by not putting the project to bid. If any of the heavy equipment involved, in this case a loader and a backhoe, sits idle the rest of the year, the arrangement is not cost-efficient, they said.

Mrs. Calabrese said if a private firm gets a federal contract, it must pay its workers union scale wages and benefits and make sure 25 per cent of the workers are from ethnic minorities.

REGARDLESS OF the dispute over who does the work, there is the real possibility Scenic Road may be endangered by a series of storms.

The winding two-lane road fronts some of the most expensive homes on the California coast. At one point near the cove, the shoulder of Scenic is no more than a yard wide. Fill dirt removed for the repair work below has left a sheer 40-foot drop from the road to beach.

The lost seawall doubled as a retainer for the fill dirt. Since the wall won't be built this winter, Askew was asked if the cliff might erode and imperil Scenic Road.

"It's not as good as with a wall, but it made it through last winter," was his answer.

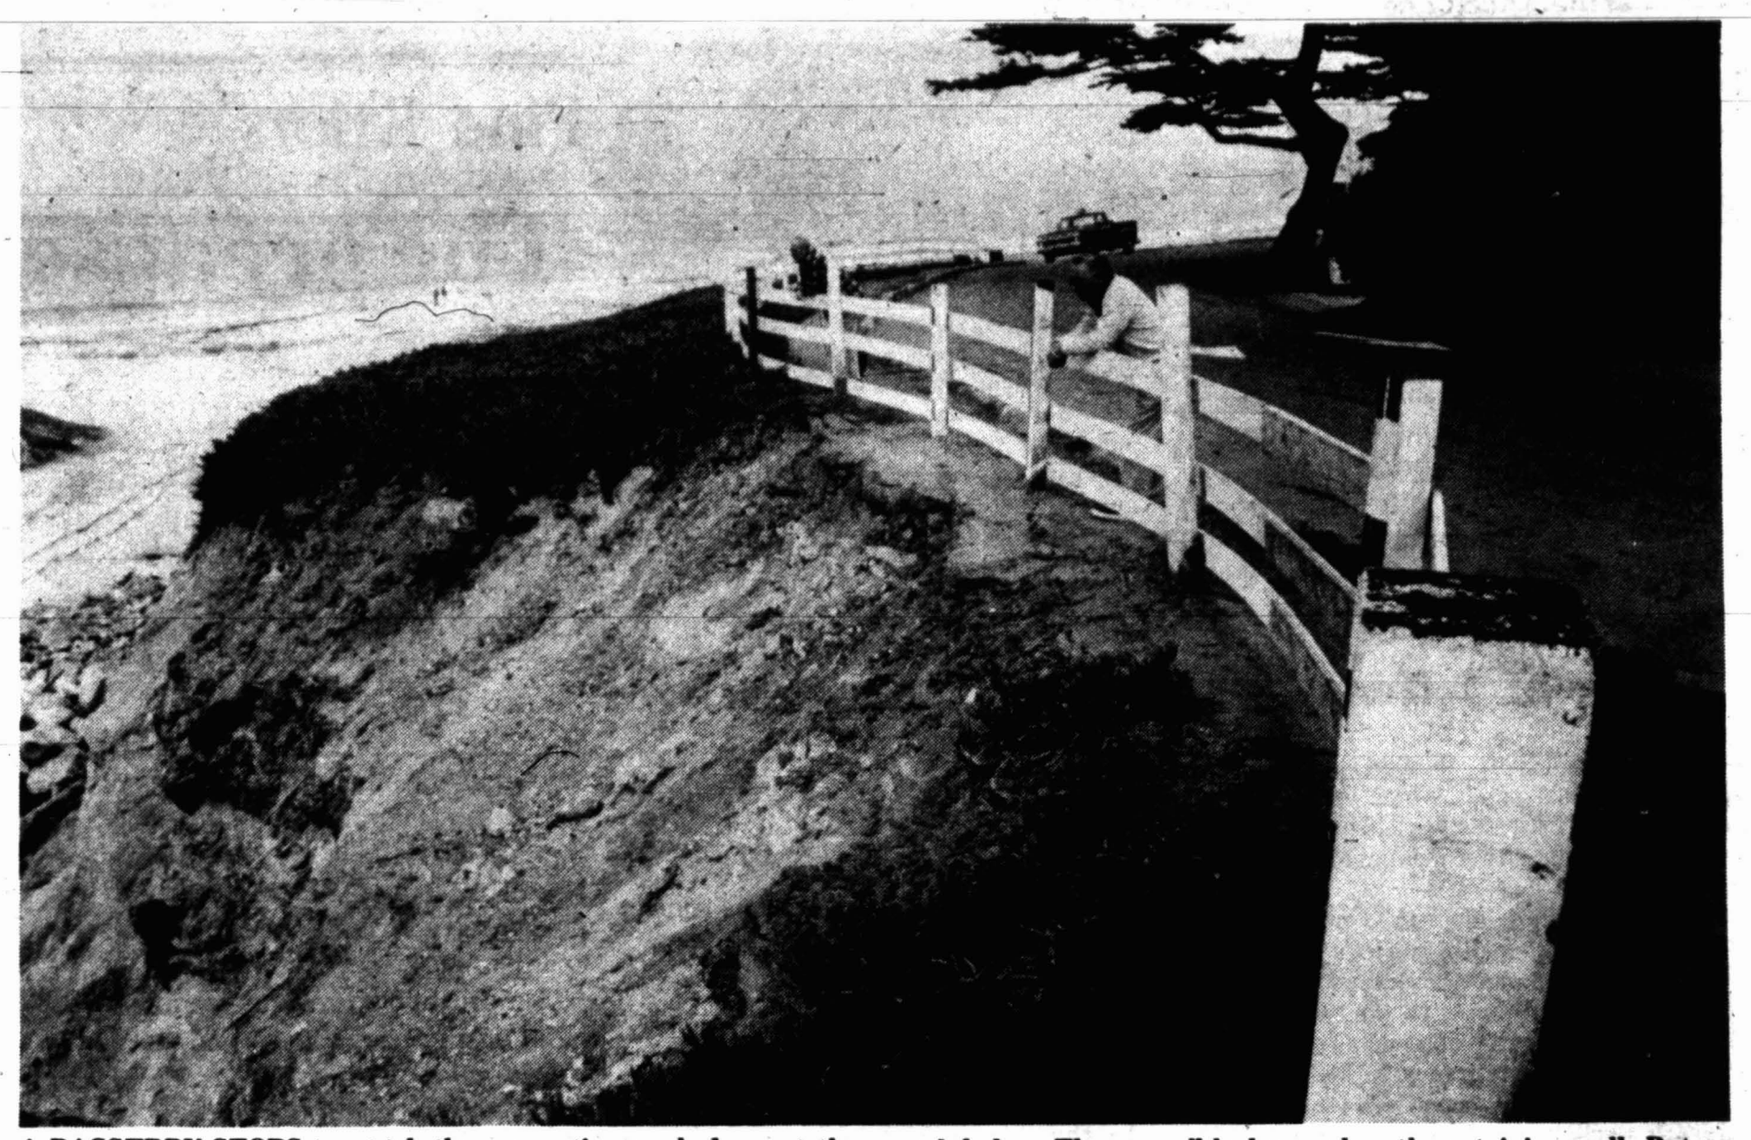
DIRT ON THE cliff had to be raked off with heavy equipment so the workmen could dig to the sandstone base of the cliff. In only one spot, the troublesome 30-foot gap, is the ground unstable. The sandstone is submerged below the sand there.



A PASSERBY STOPS to watch the excavation work down at the foot of 13th Avenue and Scenic Road. Where he is standing, the shoulder of Scenic Road is no more than one yard wide. Fill dirt held in a gradual slope against the cliff had to be removed for the repair work below. The seawall had served as the retaining wall. But no wall will be built until next spring, causing some to wonder if the exposed cliff, denuded of protective ice plant, will slide and cut into Scenic Road.

SEAWATER IS under the sand at Carmel Beach; sometimes it is no more than 10 feet down. Before a footing of concrete can be poured, the water must be sucked from below the cliffs at Cooke's Cove. One workman constantly must remove muck from the water so the pump doesn't get clogged.

Askew intends to bridge the gap by digging to the sandstone below and filling with concrete. The gap was the Achilles' heel of the previous seawall. Turbulent and prolonged high tides burrowed through the sand and under the seawall. With battering ram force, the waves put a vertical crack in the wall, the weak section slumped seaward and unsettled the wall 45 feet in each direction. Carmel public works crews deliberately toppled the section before it fell violently and caused a landslide.

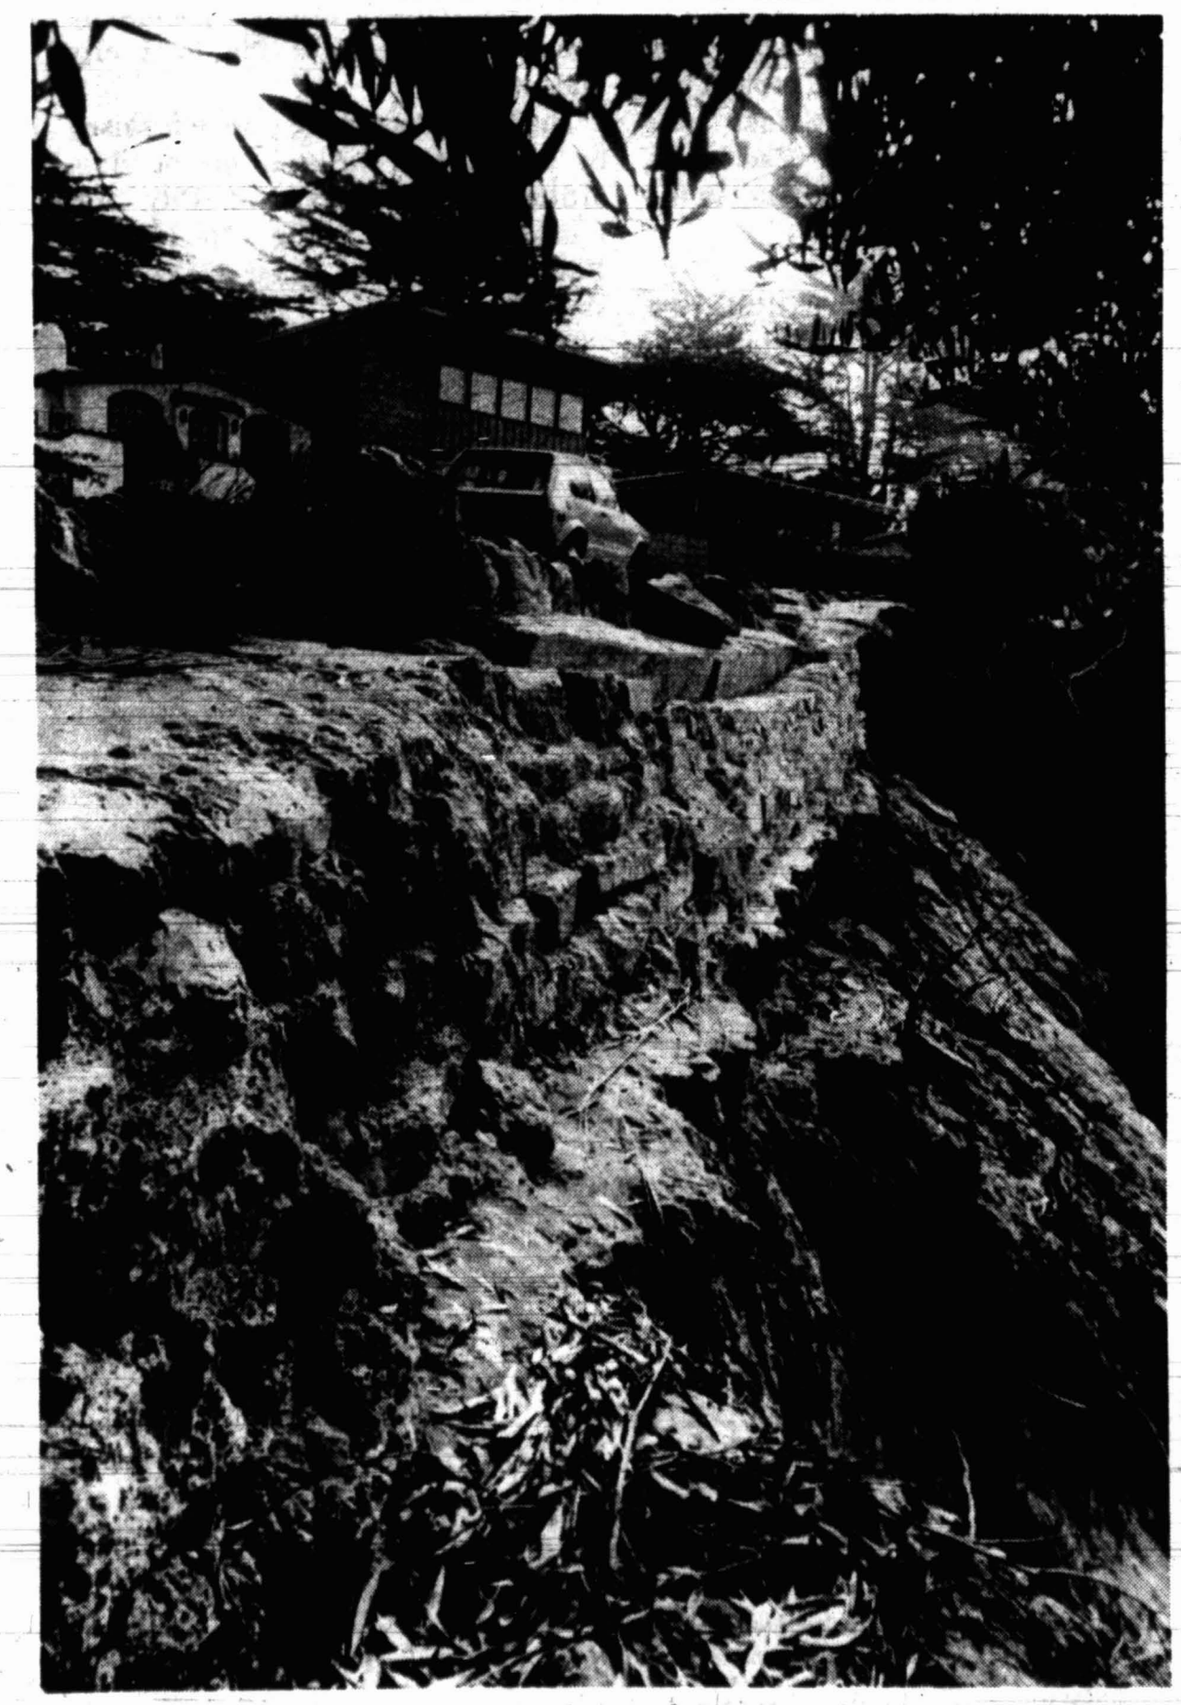
Photography by Michael Stang

Critics have called the seawall "Askew's Folly." They claim the base was not installed correctly the first time. (And the gap seems to prove their point.) But there were unusual circumstances they overlook.

"The ocean stayed high for six weeks straight," Askew said. "I'd never seen it that way before.

"With this fine sand, if water gets under the wall and into a seam, with that constant beating...well. This time we went a little stronger with it. You try to improve anything you do," he said.

Once excavated, the gap will be filled with boulders, some weighing as much as six tons. The spaces between the boulders will be filled with concrete. Rip rap will be spread along the base and piled to make a gentle slope up the cliff.



Cliffs vs. builder

ABOUT 100 yards north of Cooke's Cove along Scenic Road (left), slapping waves from last winter's storms also caused serious erosion that will have to be checked. In this case, erosion was hastened by hikers who have beaten a trail toward the beach below. When it falls, rain will cut grooves in the exposed soil and carry the dirt to the beach. (Right) William Askew Jr., whose father built some of the original seawall along Carmel Beach, said he is confident the stopgap repairs can be finished before serious rainstorms hit. Shown in the background is Cooke's Cove and the excavation work that precedes pouring a new footing for the seawall.

Love of Jeffers

Dear Editor:

Carmel has many houses, old and beautiful, large or small, which would be a great tragedy to destroy. The owner, however, does have that privilege, much as we deplore it.

For those who love the poetry of Robinson Jeffers, one of America's greatest poets, Tor House and Hawk Tower symbolize a living monument to the beauty of this magnificent stretch of land and sea, and the man who immortalized it in his poems. A great part of the house was built by Jeffers himself.

"My fingers had the art to make stone love stone..."

For those who decay the fact that the Jeffers family will have a lifetime lease in the house, this is a policy which the National Trust has established for years. The family has offered the house to the trust for much less than it could obtain on the open market.

Many of us who vacationed here for years before the Peninsula could be our home find a special meaning in his poem:

"Let us go home to Paradise,
There gentle mists are drawn along
The margins of the deep,
And up the quiet valley creep.
Our beautiful peninsula
Cannot rejoice
For all its forest, and the voice
Of breaking waves in Carmel Bay
Until we come; the cypresses
Grieve above the dove-gray seas
For us their lovers far away."

All of us who love Carmel should feel no no hesitation in contributing whatever sum we can to keep Tor House as a unique and enchanting place where once there lived a man and a woman who loved this coast in all its fierce beauty as much as we.

For annexation

Dear Editor:

Now is the time for those of us who've been hollering against the overcrowding, over-carring, overbuilding, of both the "village" of Carmel-by-the-Sea and its "sphere of influence," up the Valley, down the coast, and all around us to line up and do something in support of the big annexation deal recently proposed by—surprise!—our most dexterous performer for the developing arts—Ed Norris, county supervisor from the Salinas district.

Let us ask for support based on understanding of what annexation will mean to us as taxpayers and as residents rather than the prompt negative response and refusal even to discuss or consider it we sometimes hear from both residents and neighbors of the city. When the proposal was first made, my own reaction was serious doubt. I was sure that environmentally we in the unincorporated area would be better off under Carmel than under the indifferent eye of the county government, but was also disliking the idea of the village's losing its traditional identity as a square-mile of charm and character.

Since then, I've heard a lot of opinions—informed, ill-formed and deformed—on one side or the other. The best conclusion, I think, is found in the report by Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO) under the directorship of Michael Johnson. His finding, after lengthy study by experts in many county departments, including health, assessor's, planning, public works, flood control and water conservation, was that "it was generally agreed that a city is better equipped to provide the full range of municipal services than is the county or numerous special districts."

What a sensible conclusion, based on figures, facts, and experience, rather than fallacies, prejudices and hatred. The fact is there will be no change in tax costs after annexation, and we'll have control over our governers at the ballot box, rather than being able to vote for only 20 per cent (one out of five) of our governing body of county supervisors.

What can you do to show your support? Attend the LAFCO public meeting Nov. 28 at Sunset Center for sure, but before that offer what time you can spare for canvassing your neighborhood to Hugh Bayless, ex-city administrator, at 624-8760, or Joyce Stevens, at 624-3149.

The great seawall fiasco

By AL EISNER

WHEN LAST WINTER'S STORMS lashed the West Coast, Carmel's "free" seawall came tumbling down. It was the first time it was tested.

Seawalls are built to protect cliffs and shorelines from the ravages of the sea. If they crumble, then they don't do the job for which they are designed. This can happen because of extraordinary circumstances or because of incompetence or ignorance.

One opinion

The swirling waters undermined the cliffs along Scenic Road and we came within a few feet of losing one of the world's most beautiful drives.

How could this happen? And why did I enclose the word "free" above in quotes?

The seawall was built by employees of the city during their "spare" time over the past several years. Unaccountably, the Carmel Public Works Department failed to give the wall proper footings. It was built on a soft sandstone layer. When water crept into the sand at the foot of the seawall, cracks appeared and the seawall crumbled.

Our "free" wall turned out to be a mighty expensive project.

Because the well-intentioned amateurs who built it didn't know what they were doing, the whole project is going to have to be done over again.

To make matters worse, because of bureacratic bungling, the work may not be completed in time to protect our precious shoreline against the inevitable winter storms. (The whole sordid mess is described in detail in the article starting on page 1.)

TO MAKE MATTERS WORSE, the chowderheads at City Hall failed to observe the law by seeking public bids from contractors in the area—and the contractors and the construction unions are sore about it.

How could we find ourselves in such a predicament? How could the problem be left unattended for so long and then resolved in such a dumb manner?

The attentions of our City Council, planning commission and City Hall staff have been focused, since last spring, on the nitpicking new laws designed to "save" Carmel. While grown men and women spent interminable hours arguing whether a certain house exceeded the height limitation by a few inches, major city problems were left unattended.

It's just lousy management. The well-meaning members of the City Council do not have the qualifications to evaluate whether a major building project like a seawall is constructed well.

TWO MAJOR ISSUES are raised by the seawall fiasco.

The first is whether the city really needs all those people on the public works department payroll. Can we really perform the street work and other jobs more efficiently than contractors in the area? Have we fully accounted for the massive fringe benefits the city employees enjoy? What about the dozens of pieces of heavy equipment the city owns and operates? Do we really need all that machinery?

And what about the choice real estate occupied by the public works department in the commercial zone on Junipero? Have we computed how much benefit the taxpayers might enjoy if it were placed back on the property tax rolls, and if the property were sold, leased or used for other purposes (like a parking lot perhaps?).

There has been constant debate through the years over the issue. To my knowledge, the question has never been studied by an independent management consultant. If the city doesn't act to investigate the matter, maybe an independent committee of citizens could be recruited. The public works department, after all, gobbles up about 25 per cent of the total city budget.

The other disturbing question raised by the seawall fiasco is the puzzling attitudes and actions of City Administrator Jack Collins. He told the Pine Cone that he knew his actions skirted the law.

It has been common knowledge around City Hall for some time that several of the contractors out there were getting upset at the antics of our city. Bypassing the public bid process is a serious matter.

Why did he do it?

Maybe for the same kind of reason he stubbornly refuses to allow a building inspector to have a look at Councilman Helen Arnold's rooftop solar heater. Until he does, we're going to periodically re-run my earlier editorial as a reminder. (See adjacent page.)

WANT AD: Job opportunity—a man with cast iron stomach, wooden head, nerves of steel; the tongue of a viper, shrewdness of a fox, ability to dodge like a weasel. Must be willing to work all hours of day or night, especially through the night and has to be willing to reside in Carmel for 20-year minimum, no matter what.

Pay: nothing. Fringe benefits, everything or questionable. Must be well versed in constitutional law, and how to up-date it.

Position: Carmel city councilman.

Effective: if "Heritage City" plan goes through. Apply anytime.

OUR CITY ATTORNEY sure comes up with some interesting proposals, recommendations and ordinances. He seems especially talented with the ability to draft a new ordinance in the wee small hours, just as the council discusses the possibility of same.

His new proposals for the license board seem like trying to take the running of the city totally away from each department and even undercutting everything the city administrator was hired to do.

But then, maybe that's his aim.

THE WAY ALL meetings seem to be going now, it's like a revival of the Hatfield-McCoy feud.

Maybe all members of each board, council and commission should just line up on Ocean Avenue, dressed like Daisy Mae, belt out a chorus of Fussin', Fightin' and Feudin' and be done with it.

If they did, it would be the only justified round of applause they've ever gotten.

WHAT WAS THAT old saying? "You always destroy the thing you love best." Is it possible that that is the problem which besets Carmel? I do not think that anyone would deny that their love of Carmel is the basic reason for all efforts to "preserve and protect" our fair city. The problem seems to be to what length that love is driving some people. "Love is blind" has great truth, also. But that blindness is the loving in spite of the faults, or flaws. There is nothing on this earth that is perfect. So we must take a measure or scale: so much on the good side, so much on the bad side. Then whether it balances or not, there is your measure of love. The scale may wobble, but the love does not.

Each of us loves Carmel. Each in our own way. And there are probably no two loves that would be the same. But we have fallen into a time of—"My love is best; your's is not."

This is a community that brags about its intelligence. Now we must use our love and intelligence to work together, in calmness and realism to keep our city, with all its flaws, the place that we love best.

SOME CARMEL elected officials have been accused of believing they are above the law, but Mayor Gunnar Norberg took quick action to comply with a citywide request that merchants remove window decals. The decals need special permits and few have them. Norberg owns a travel agency and this before-and-after sequence shows the esthetic wisdom of the ordinance against window decals. Hogwash or whitewash?

(Editor's note: As of Monday, City Hall has not inspected the solar collector atop the home of Councilman Helen Arnold. We wish to reiterate that it should be done. Mrs. Arnold has welcomed an inspection to clear away any suspicion. Here is our editorial of Oct. 26 that has gone unheeded:)

By AL EISNER

AT THE RISK of boring our readers, I'm going to have to persist in the matter of the solar heater installed on top of Councilman Helen Arnold's new house without benefit of an inspection.

Our regular readers may recall that Building Inspector Fred Cunningham confirmed that the rooftop unit was not inspected. The matter came up for public discussion when a Carmel resident asked the question of Mrs. Arnold at a City Council meeting earlier this month.

At first, Councilman Arnold, through City Administrator Jack Collins, insisted that the unit was installed properly, that the house had gone through its final inspection, and that no further inspections were necessary.

Building Inspector Ron Warren, contacted at the hospital where he underwent minor surgery, stated clearly that he never inspected the rooftop unit, because he didn't know it was there.

It never appeared on any plans that are on file at City Hall, you see. Since it didn't appear on the plans, he had no reason to climb to the roof to inspect the installation to see if it was safe or if the solar heater addition brought the house above the 24-foot height limitation.

Apparently yielding to public pressure, Mrs. Arnold told a Pine Cone reporter this week that she would welcome an inspection.

NOW, HOWEVER, our city administrator has intervened by stating that the inspection is not necessary "because there is nothing to inspect" (see article, page 2).

Hogwash.

It now seems obvious that Collins is trying to obscure the facts. He insists that no inspection is necessary because the solar unit was not added on after the house underwent final inspection.

That's a neat semantic trick.

At this point, nobody is saying that the solar heater was not installed on top of the house at the time it received final inspection.

It remains abundantly clear that the solar unit does not appear on the plans for the building and that nobody from the building department has inspected it to make sure it is safe, legal and installed properly.

"I'm not going to send a building inspector down there unless there is a damn good reason," Collins told the Pine Cone.

Well, I believe there is a very good reason—Helen Arnold's credibility as a member of the Carmel City Council.

Mrs. Arnold, to her credit, has acted in a statesmanlike fashion by stating, "Any qualified building inspector can come inspect this house. My conscience is clear."

Why should Mrs. Arnold have to perform her duties as a member of the City Council under a cloud created by a City Hall bureaucrat? What possible reason could Collins have in mind for stubbornly refusing to have an inspector go over the job? Since questions have been raised, why not lay them to rest?

One ugly answer is that Collins may have made a deal with Mrs. Arnold. She could have agreed to an inspection with specific instructions to Collins that he prevent the inspection.

At best, Collins is displaying a kind of arrogance that is not familiar to most people in Carmel.

At worst, something is rotten.

Let's get the matter cleared up and get on with more important matters.

Rejects electric-powered buses

Council decides to pursue Carmel mini-bus system

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

THE CARMEL City Council has taken a first step toward establishing minibus service. On Monday, it approved the concept of minibuses here. Earlier, an executive from one transportation company told the council Carmel could have a system operating as early as July and at a yearly cost of about $135,000.

The council scrapped the idea of using electric buses. In September, the council looked favorably on electric buses. But a U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) engineer stated in May that electric buses were feasible for Carmel. More recent federal studies indicate, however, that electric buses lack the power to climb hills like those in Carmel, City Administrator Jack Collins told the councilmen.

With the electric bus idea scrapped, the council agreed to forego hiring a consultant on electric buses. Instead, Collins recommended that the city study diesel- or gasoline-powered buses. The council agreed.

"We are premature to buy fancy carts until we have some operating experience with ordinary horses," Collins said.

The vote supporting a minibus system was 3-0. Councilman Mike Brown abstained. He said he needed more facts. Mayor Gunnar Norberg was absent, recuperating from the heart attack he suffered last month.

"What are we doing here? We have no facts. It sounds like you're ready to get the keys delivered," Brown said.

"It has got to happen," said Councilman Howard Brunn, who presided as mayor. Brunn was the first to push for a minibus system. "Minibuses are a natural for the people who live here," he said.

Brunn said the council should take "a position we're not going to back down from."

PATRICK D. Linington, vice president of San Luis Transportation Inc. of San Luis Obispo said his company could provide minibus service for about $135,000 annually. That would include the use of three 25-passenger buses 10 hours daily, five days per week. The San Luis Obispo company would own the buses.

"The system could be operational within nine months, which is the approximate vehicle delivery time," Linington told the council.

The city should decide who such a bus system would serve, said Thomas D. Albert, the general manager of Monterey Peninsula Transit. The council agreed and assigned that study to the City Hall staff.

"A major advantage of a local bus system would be better coverage, especially in the northwestern area of the city, and in unincorporated areas such as Carmel Point and Carmel Woods," Albert said in a letter to the city. Monterey Peninsula Transit also would like to operate a minibus system in Carmel, Albert said.

THE COUNCIL should delay a decision on the bus system until the annexation process is completed, said Frank Lloyd, a Carmel resident and library board trustee. "The people who live in those areas are some of the strongest supporters of minibuses," Lloyd said. Annexation that would double the population of Carmel is pending.

"This whole thing is one big knot," said Gross. "We need a comprehensive program for buses, parking and one-way streets. We can't take this piecemeal."

Two companies jockey for bus contract

Two companies are suddenly jockeying for position in case minibus service starts in Carmel.

Monterey Peninsula Transit (MPT) is ready to update a 1976 proposal that the Carmel City Council rejected. And San Luis Transportation Inc. of San Luis Obispo has offered the city a three-year service contract.

The San Luis Transportation proposal would cost Carmel about $135,000 a year, according to Patrick D. Linington, vice president of the firm. Under that proposal, two buses would run 10 hours a day five days a week. The MPT proposal would cost about $85,000 a year, according to Thomas Albert, the general manager. One bus would run 12 hours a day. It would operate every day.

San Luis Transportation projects 72,000 riders a year paying a 25-cent fare. MPT estimates fewer than 36,000 riders each year.

MPT fares are 35 cents, but senior citizens and the handicapped ride for free.

"A transit system in Carmel will be very, very successful," Linington said Tuesday. Linington formerly owned Carmel Motoring Company, a small tour bus service that operated here from 1975 to 1977. He said his company is offering "twice the system" that MPT has proposed "because two buses would operate at once." He said he envisions more than 90,000 riders annually, once operation begins.

"Those estimates are awfully high," Albert said in a separate interview. "I'd be surprised if it was half that number."

In 1976, the City Council rejected MPT's bid for a minibus system here. In a 3-2 vote, the council objected to the long-term financial commitment involved. Linington drew up a minibus plan at the same time. His proposal also was rejected.

Both the MPT and San Luis Transportation buses would seat 25 passengers. The MPT buses would operate on diesel fuel and the San Luis Transportation vehicles would use gasoline.

Both companies say they can begin full service by July. MPT already has minibuses on order that could be ready by July, Albert said. Linington said his company also could be ready by then.

Linington, a former Carmel resident, owns a ranch in Carmel Valley. He said he could store the buses there "so the city won't have that to worry about."

San Luis Transportation owns San Luis Obispo Transit, San Luis Rent-A-Car and Yellow Cab Co. of San Luis Obispo.

Softening seen in R-4 standards

CONCESSIONS have been made at the committee level and it appears that the rigid standards for R-4 (limited residential) district developments could be modified. An appointed panel has recommended liberalized parking requirements that could allow for more apartments on sites in the district.

The R-4 committee is composed of property owners and city officials appointed by Robert Stephenson, chairman of the Carmel Planning Commission. The committee is working on modifications to the R-4 regulations.

The panel will study expanding allowed commercial uses there at another session scheduled next Thursday at 4 p.m. It meets at City Hall.

Property owners have complained that the tough restrictions make apartment construction difficult. But the zone is designed to encourage apartments. The ad hoc committee of property owners and city officials have informally agreed to:

- Eliminate restrictions that count surface parking as lot coverage.
- Allow cars to back out from sites that are 8,000 square feet or less. Cars must have room to turn around and pull out forward under present guidelines.
- Allow garage openings to extend up to five feet above sidewalk level without counting as additional stories. All parking must be below sidewalk level under present restrictions.

Liberal tilt to laws on parking, lot coverage

These recommendations will eventually be passed on to the Carmel Planning Commission for study. But the commission is not likely to review them until next year. The committee has met four times in two months while examining setback and parking requirements. It still must review the commercial uses in the zone. Property owners want to expand allowed and conditional businesses.

Only four commercial uses are permitted in the R-4 zone. Those include nursery schools, certain motels, lumberyards and medical offices. Some 27 conditional uses are allowed. These require use permits from the commission. Most of the conditional uses are resident-oriented, such as barber shops and laundries.

Originally a 26-member ad hoc committee, the panel has shrunk to 12 regular members. Three of them are R-4 property owners.

WHAT I HATE to see in R-4 are any restrictions that might be imposed on building residential units that are any more severe than in any other areas of the city," said Arthur Strasburger, at the Nov. 2 meeting. Strasburger is a committee member and the owner of Carmel Realty.

"Present restrictions make desirable development more difficult than ever," stated Olof Dahlstrand, a former councilman and committee member.

"If the R-4 scheme is such a good idea," said property owner John Gamble, "perhaps it should go around the entire business district?" Gamble owns the Junipero Professional Building on the west side of Junipero between Fourth and Fifth. He said the present restrictions are unfair because other zones in the city have less severe guidelines.

Stephenson appointed two subcommittees at the last session. A parking subcommittee includes Eugene Hammond, Melvin Kline and Philip Oberg. A coverage and setback subcommittee includes Kline, Dahlstrand, Stephenson and Leslie Gross.

The R-4 zone covers portions of Junipero and Torres between Third and Fifth avenues. The council approved the rezoning on a split vote Aug. 7. The action prompted David Hughes, the former councilman, to resign. He objected to the rezoning. He called it "action by symbolism." The rezoning ordinance became law on Sept. 7.

The final decision on any R-4 revisions must be made to the City Council.

New, successful tack

"THE RESPONSE HAS been wonderful," says Joe Barnes, community relations representative for Goodwill Industries. A month ago, Goodwill decided to try a new tactic in collecting donations. The charity replaced its drop box at Carmel Rancho Shopping Center with a trailer. No big deal except an attendant was put on duty every day from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. His job was to appraise the value of the donation and give the donor a receipt. Donations are deductible from state and federal income taxes. Since then, four trailers have been installed in Monterey County, Barnes said. The trailer is behind Brinton's Hardware Store and is open seven days a week. (Michael Stang photo)

Ordinance to gong loud noises in Carmel goes to the councilmen

An anti-noise ordinance that would regulate everything from loud motorcycles to barking dogs is scheduled to be presented to the Carmel City Council on Monday.

The council asked City Attorney George Brehmer to draw up the noise ordinance at its Sept. 11 meeting. The council objected to the loud sounds from the blowing machines used by some merchants and residents to clear debris from their property.

Brehmer said the draft ordinance "can apply to all sorts of loud noises." Enforcement of the ordinance would require that the city purchase a device to measure decibel levels, he said.

The proposed ordinance would prohibit loud noises from people, animals, vehicles and other machinery, according to Brehmer. "In effect, it's a nuisance ordinance. It would be used in cases where people are deprived of their ability to enjoy public or private places because of excessive noise," he explained.

The ordinance would require the drivers of delivery trucks and buses to turn off their engines when they stop to load or unload, Brehmer said.

Excessive noise would become an infraction, punishable with a $50 fine for the first offense, according to Brehmer. It would apply to both the commercial and residential districts.

The law would not limit noise inside a business or residence. It only would regulate loud noises that travel outside of homes or businesses. "We're not going to go into people's homes and tell them to turn their radios down," Brehmer said.

Although the council will study the ordinance Monday, the first reading is not expected until its Dec. 4 meeting, Brehmer said.

Student exchange program jeopardized in Carmel

A PROGRAM that brings foreign teachers into Carmel Unified School District language classes may be eliminated this spring because the district is short of money.

Bud Chapple, foreign language committee chairman for the district, asked school trustees in late October to put up the $589 needed to bring an Amity Aide instructor to the district next spring.

The trustees deferred action until contract negotiations with district employees are complete and they know if there will be money for the program.

Chapple is worried that if there is too much delay, the district might not get a qualified instructor through the program.

Amity Aide is a private, non-profit corporation based in Southern California. It contacts and screens young people, primarily teachers, who wish to come to America and learn more about its culture. It then arranges work and housing for them with school districts nationwide and brings them to the United States.

Carmel schools have participated in Amity Aide for the past five years. Under the program, a teacher from a foreign country spends a semester in Carmel Middle School and Carmel High School, working with foreign language students.

In the past, teachers have come from France, Switzerland, Chile, Colombia and Mexico.

The teachers provide individual or small group opportunities for students to converse in a foreign tongue, Chapple said. They also discuss their nation's culture and work with teachers to improve language instruction.

They stay with the family of a district student while they are here and eat their meals there. The foreign language departments raise about $200 to pay a $10 per week allowance and $2.50 weekly lunch allowance.

UNTIL LAST year, the foreign language departments also pooled their resources to pay the $589 stipend. But they, too, were caught in a budget squeeze and asked the district for funds.

The visiting teachers don't receive much money (the $589 goes to Amity Aide for administration and travel expenses.) Chapple said their incentive is the opportunity to get "more insight into American culture" since they often teach English in their native countries.

Chapple said the program has been well-received by students, their teachers, parents and the trustees. Only the budget constraints of Proposition 13 threaten the program this year.

The program reaches a large number of students, he said, particularly if the Amity Aide teacher is fluent in more than one language. District enrollment figures for the past three years show that nearly half of all Carmel Unified School District students have enrolled in foreign language classes.

If money were no problem, Superintendent Carl Wilsey said he would recommend that trustees underwrite the program. If money is tight, he added, "I would have to rank it lower than a lot of other basic things."

Chapple said he will wait and see if the trustees can find the money for Amity Aide. In the meantime, he added, "We always welcome donations."

East of Highway 1

Halved fire district income stirs anti-annexation debate

ONE OF THE major issues in the Carmel annexation discussion involves territory outside the proposed new city boundaries.

It is the property and people of County Service Area 43, the fire district that serves areas on both east and west sides of Highway 1.

If annexation succeeds, the district would be split in half along Highway 1, the east remaining in the special tax district. It would lose 45 per cent of its assessed valuation, some $32 million. The annual loss in taxes would be up to $115,666, according to Michael Johnson, executive officer of the Local Agency Formation Commission.

Step Tyner, chairman of the advisory committee for CSA 43, contends this would destroy the paid department operated out of the Rio Road fire station.

Johnson, on the other hand, said he believes the district would survive. He suggested in written recommendations to LAFCO that it either contract with Carmel to continue fire protection to the annexed areas or look into consolidation with the Carmel Valley, Mid-Valley and Carmel Highlands departments.

He raised a new possibility in an interview Friday: consolidation with County Service Areas 42 and 39, which serve Pebble Beach and the unincorporated Monterey areas.

EVEN IF ALL relief efforts fail, Johnson said the benefits of annexation outweigh the problems for a fire district he called an "interim solution" to growth in the Carmel and Carmel Valley area.

"It should not act as a roadblock to a long-term solution" like annexation, he said.

Tyner bristles at such comments. He calls Johnson's proposals for CSA 43 "rather childish."

"To hell with 'em," he said. "We started this (district) 15 years ago and built it up little by little. Why should we tear it down?"

THE CONTRACT with Carmel for fire protection wouldn't succeed, he said, because the city "would want to tell our fire department what to do."

City Administrator Jack Collins also is unsure if the city would pay CSA 43 to give fire service to the areas now in its boundaries but targeted for annexation.

'Hell with them,' one leader says

"I don't know," he said. "We have some real problems with the particulars. I don't know what greater advantage to the city it would be to have a contract."

Collins said he would have to look at the costs of such an arrangement and the potential benefits to the city before he would recommend a contract to the City Council.

As for consolidation with other fire districts, Tyner is adamant. "It can't be done," he said.

Joining the other Carmel Valley and Highlands departments is not feasible, he contends, because they are volunteer organizations and CSA 43 has paid personnel provided by the California Department of Forestry.

If the district consolidates with CSA 42 and 39, Tyner is worried about future annexations in those districts.

"Pebble Beach is fighting this takeover thing (by 20th Century-Fox) and there is talk of incorporation," he said. Portions of CSA 39 eventually will be annexed to Monterey, he said.

IF THE THREE service areas consolidated, they still would face those threats, according to Tyner.

He said CSA 43 and Monterey County, as they stand now, provides exactly the public service people want.

"We have good police protection, good fire protection," Tyner said. "What the hell else do we need? We're paying taxes for roads and street lights. We're paying for what we want."

Johnson said the unincorporated areas benefit from Carmel services and are affected by actions of the Carmel City Council. Without annexation, he said, the residents there have no voice in the city's policies.

One of his recommendations to LAFCO is for the entire annexation—if approved—to be delayed until Dec. 31, 1979. This would mean the new city residents could vote in the March 1980 election for mayor and city councilmen. It will be the first ballot for an elected mayor in city history.

All the annexation issues will be discussed when LAFCO meets at Sunset Center in Carmel on Tuesday, Nov. 28 at 7 p.m.

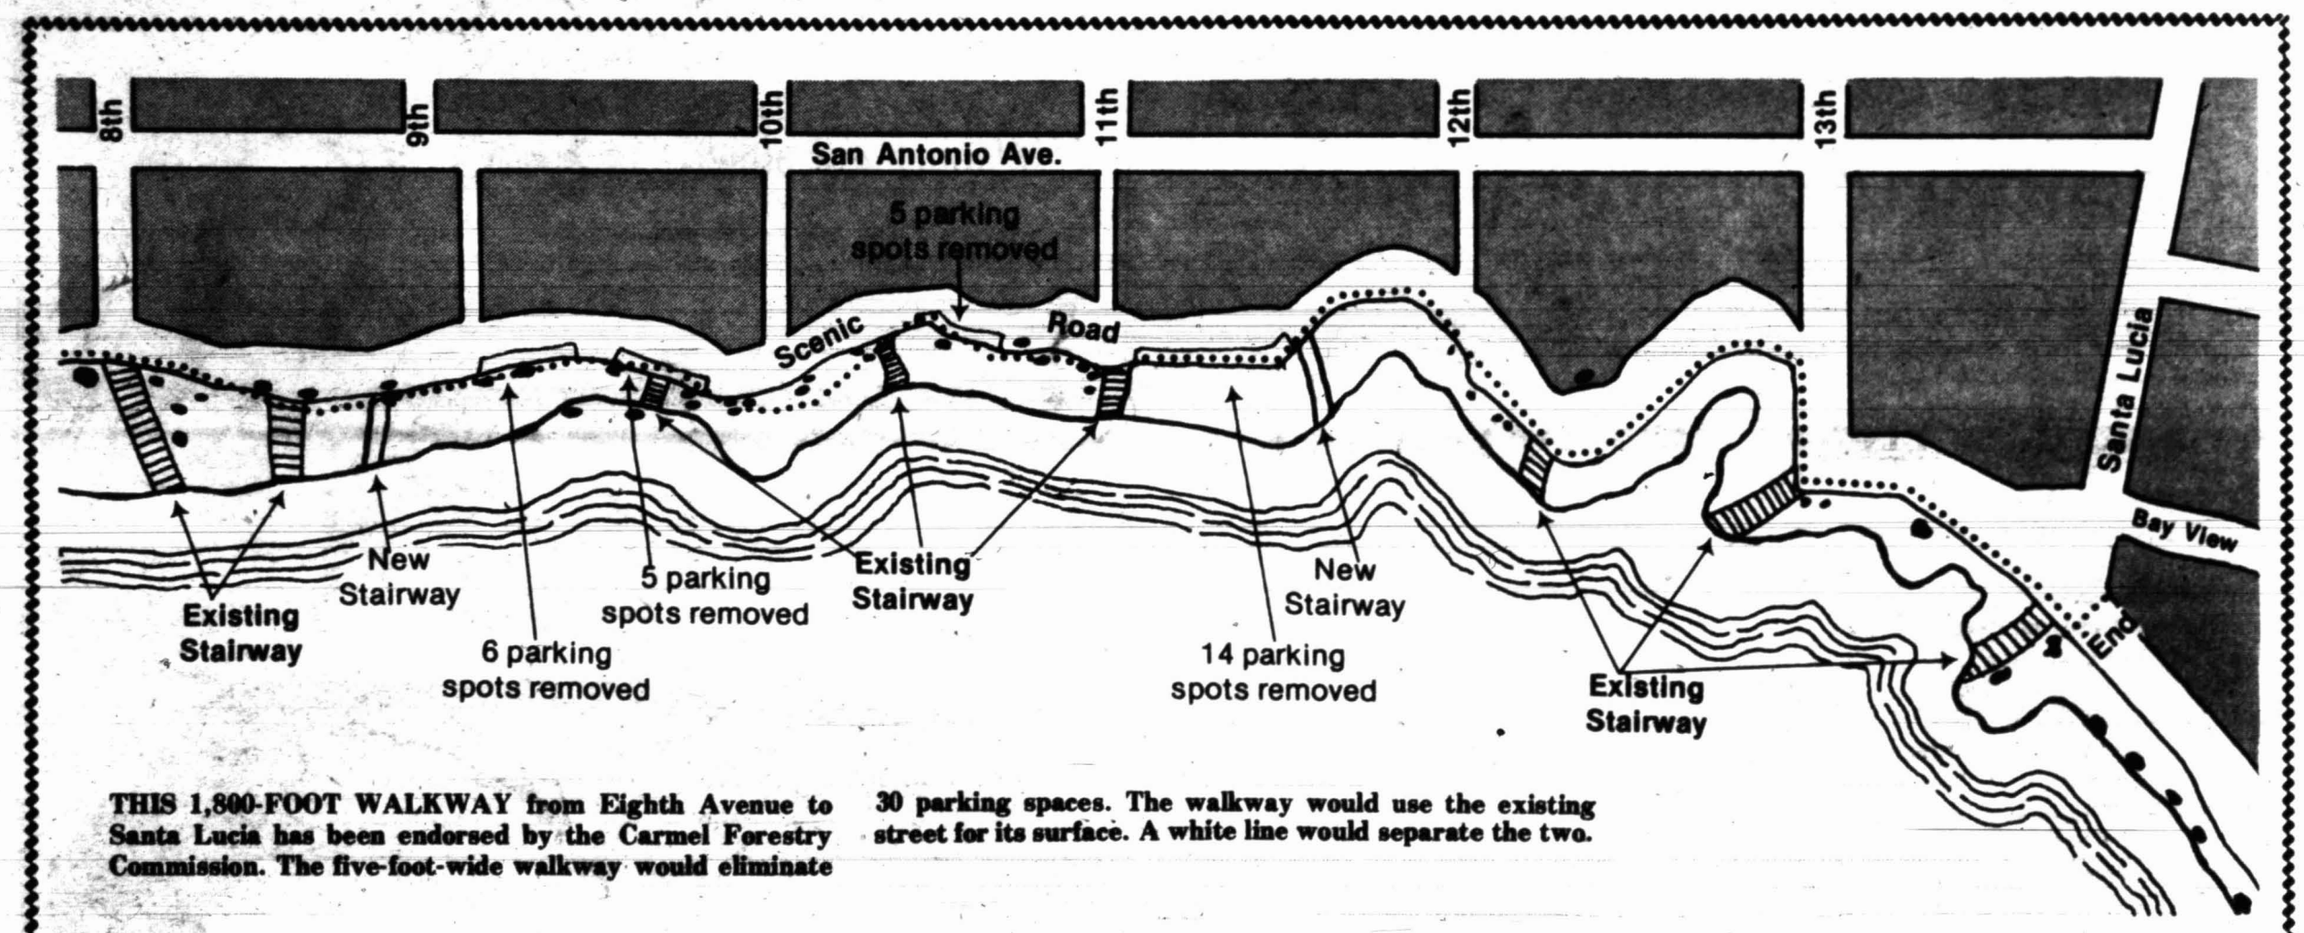
Norberg will take a month off

Carmel Mayor Gunnar Norberg is expected to attend the Carmel City Council meeting Dec. 4, according to his wife.

Norberg did not attend the Nov. 6 meeting and he will not attend next Monday's meeting, Wies Norberg said.

She said the mayor began some moderate exercise this week. The mayor walked half a mile Tuesday, Mrs. Norberg said.

Norberg suffered a mild heart attack last month. He was hospitalized for five days at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.



THIS 1,800-FOOT WALKWAY from Eighth Avenue to Santa Lucia has been endorsed by the Carmel Forestry Commission. The five-foot-wide walkway would eliminate 30 parking spaces. The walkway would use the existing street for its surface. A white line would separate the two.

Scenic Road walkway endorsed by foresters

CONSTRUCTION of a walkway covering a third of a mile along Scenic Road was endorsed last week by the Carmel Forestry Commission. The walk would be designed to reduce cliff erosion and to give pedestrians a better view of Carmel Beach.

The five-foot-wide walkway would be at street level, separated from it by a white line. It would run 1,800 feet from Eighth Avenue to Santa Lucia.

Thirty of the estimated 200 parking spaces along the stretch would be eliminated. The block along Scenic between 11th and 12th would lose 14 parking spaces on the west side of the center divider there.

The proposal also recommends some 700 feet of two-foot high, wood-beam fencing along parts of Scenic Road. The fencing would reduce the foot traffic down the cliffs that causes erosion. It also would serve as a retainer where the cliffs drop straight down to the beach.

The fence is designed to allow beach views. The fencing is recommended in four areas. The longest is a 350-foot stretch between 11th and 12th streets, where there is one stairway that leads to the beach. The commission also recommended widening the nine existing stairways and the addition of two more.

The stairways are about three feet wide. They would be widened to about six feet. The two new stairways would be located at Ninth and 11th streets.

FENCING along portions of the west side of Scenic Road would look like this. This stretch is at Carmel Point near Scenic Road and Stewart Way. The fence is slightly higher than two feet.

THE WALKWAY proposal could reach the Carmel Planning Commission for study at its Dec. 20 meeting, according to Robert Griggs, the Carmel city planning director. The walkway would also require approval from the regional Coastal Commission, Griggs added.

The forestry commission has discussed the proposal at its past three meetings. Chairman Matt Smith said he may schedule a special meeting this month to work out final details of the proposal. It was devised by Gregory D'Ambrosio, the city forester.

Estimates on walkway construction costs were not available. Costs, however, have been greatly reduced by an agreement to use the existing pavement for the walkway.

"How much should we figure this will cost us?" Smith asked City Administrator Jack Collins, who attended the meeting.

"As much as you want it to," Collins replied. "Come up with a concept you like. Then we'll price that concept."

The city has no funds budgeted for the walkway, Collins said. "Portions of it would require significant additional outlay. Other portions we could do ourselves," Collins stated. City public works department crews are capable of doing all the work, D'Ambrosio said.

The heavy beam fences suggested would be "a lot more massive than we need," said Commissioner Bruce Crane.

"With anything more flimsy, it would end up being donated to bonfires," D'Ambrosio said.

Carmel school trustees adopt study-at-home diploma program

CARMEL STUDENTS who can't or won't attend regular classes still can earn a diploma under an at-home independent study policy approved by the district board of trustees in late October.

The policy, which complies with a new state education law, gives students the chance to design their own programs and work at home toward graduation.

According to Carmel High School counselor Louise Tanous, the independent study program should draw a diverse group of students.

"It can run the gamut from kids who want out of school to students who want to take the (diploma equivalency) examination and go on to Monterey Peninsula College," she said.

Under state law, any high school student 16 or older can take the standardized test in lieu of completing the graduation requirements. If he passes, he receives a certificate from the state equivalent to a high school diploma.

The program also will serve students who have discipline and attendance problems, or who need independent study because of physical, emotional or educational handicaps, according to the policy.

STUDENTS MUST agree to a contract with the district to participate in independent study. They must meet with their parents or guardians, a school counselor or teacher, and the high school principal to develop the contract. All the participants sign the agreement.

It will specify what the student's objectives are; how many credits he will receive for his work; a statement of what work he will do and how long he will spend on it daily; the names of anyone besides school district personnel who will assist the student; and a plan for reporting back to the district on his progress with the program.

Mrs. Tanous said the work will be monitored once a week.

Independent study is permitted both on and off campus, she said. Classes can be required courses or electives and can be self-taught.

Mrs. Tanous said students who might opt for the program are those who already are involved in a career yet who want to maintain some contact with school.

She also cited one high school student who can't attend classes because she must stay at home and care for her parents, both of whom are ill. For her, Mrs. Tanous said, independent study is the only alternative to dropping out entirely.

"This doesn't close the door to returning to school," she said.

Immortality's price: To be determined in off-beat auction

Did you ever want to name a street after yourself? Or your parakeet? Or your favorite town in southwest England?

Well, thanks to the developer of the Carmel Rancho Post Office subdivision and the American Cancer Society, the opportunity is yours.

On Nov. 30, the right to name two access streets for the development off Rio Road will be auctioned off to the highest bidder. All proceeds will go to the cancer society.

Similar auctions have taken place elsewhere, with Long Beach setting the record. A street name there was auctioned off for $18,000, according to Carmel insurance broker Clark Struve, who thought up the money raiser. But then the Long Beach name also went on a big sign over the freeway off-ramp to the street.

The success in the southland prompted Struve to see if the same thing would work here. He contacted Carl Hooper of Bestor Engineers Inc., agent for developer Emil Magliocco of San Francisco.

According to Hooper, Magliocco was "more than happy" to give up the rights to the street names to the cancer society.

The streets in question are the access roads to the Post Office subdivision, one from Rio Road adjacent to the post office, and one from Carmel Rancho Boulevard.

The Monterey County Planning Department discourages people from naming streets after themselves or others.

Aside from that, the only restriction is that the name not duplicate an existing street name in the county.

The auction will take place at the Pebble Beach Club on Nov. 30 beginning at 7 p.m. Tickets for the event are $35 per person and include a one-hour open bar, dinner and dancing.

Other auction items include vacation trips, dinners, tennis lessons, antiques and art.

Reservations are available by calling the American Cancer Society at 372-4521.

City Hall reshuffle is put off

There will be no reorganization of the Carmel Building Department until after the Carmel City Council's mid-year budget session scheduled in January.

The council decided that Monday.

"The city shouldn't spend another damn dime on hiring more employees. We should be cutting staff, not adding," said Councilman Leslie Gross.

"Procedural improvements" that may require a temporary employee in the department are needed, City Administrator Jack Collins said in a memorandum to the council. But he added, "I have strong objections to placing the planning commission in a supervisory role with either the planning or building staff. It is inconceivable to me that sever part-time people could effectively guide...two very busy departments."

Restaurants told to post signs if they use microwave ovens

Carmel restaurants that use microwave ovens would have to say so on signs posted by their cash registers and on their menus under an ordinance adopted by the Carmel City Council on Monday.

The ordinance goes for its second reading at the council's session scheduled next Monday. The vote was 3-1 with Councilman Howard Brunn voting no. "I'm not satisfied that the present data shows microwaves are dangerous to health," he said.

The ordinance was proposed by Councilman Mike Brown. He said he is concerned about health hazards microwave ovens may pose. "It's not going to hurt the restaurants any," said Councilman Leslie Gross.

Brunn disagreed. "I think we ought to sit down and talk with the restaurant people before laying this on them," he said.

Film buffs ask for rent-free space at Sunset Center

Three weeks ago, the Carmel City Council offered rent-free space at Sunset Center to Francois Martin of Carmel Valley, whose Tantamount Theatre was destroyed by a fire Oct. 5. Now, a group of film buffs has requested that same free rental.

The Monterey Peninsula Film Society asked the Carmel Cultural Commission last week for rent-free space "until we're on our feet," said Caryn Brooke Ecker, director of the group.

Since Oct. 4 the club has screened film classics on Wednesday nights at Leonard Carpenter Hall in Sunset Center. It rents the hall for $35, but lagging membership and low attendance has forced the group to request free rental.

The council's offer to Martin prompted the request, Miss Ecker said.

Meanwhile, Martin has not accepted the council's offer, according to Richard Tyler, director of Sunset Center. Martin received a similar offer from Hidden Valley Music Seminars in Carmel Valley, Tyler said.

"The council's offer to the Tantamount prompted our request. But our group is screening films not shown anywhere else on the Peninsula," said Miss Ecker. The film society is a non-profit group.

The commission will make a recommendation on the request when it meets Nov. 27. The meeting is at Sunset Center at 7:30 p.m.

The film society had its first showing at the Tantamount Theatre in August. But it was forced to relocate when the rental costs there were raised, according to Miss Ecker. The group moved to Sunset Center.

Literary magazine due out

Some 2,000 issues of Carmel's first literary quarterly, Dideann, will be available in Carmel on Dec. 22, according to John Dotson, the editor.

The magazine will cost about $3. It will be available at most Peninsula bookstores. The 48-page publication primarily will include prose works by Carmel and Carmel Valley authors, Dotson said.

Dotson has selected 12 manuscripts from more than 50 contributors for the premiere issue. The writing quality is "extremely high," he said.

The Dideann staff soon will solicit manuscripts for its second issue. That is scheduled for publication on March 22. Dideann is a Gaelic word that means refuge or haven.

Unpopular stop signs will be removed soon

Less than two months after putting two new stop signs at Ninth and San Carlos, the Carmel City Council has decided to remove them.

The city had received one written complaint and many telephone calls from irate residents about the signs, City Administrator Jack Collins reported. Last month, an unidentified motorist hitched a rope around one of the signs and pulled it down with his car.

The signs are at a T-intersection in front of Sunset Center. They were installed in mid-September over the objections of the police, the planning commission and its traffic and circulation subcommittee.

The council re-examined the need for the signs at the request of the planning commission. The council voted 3-1 to remove them. Councilman Howard Brunn dissented. Councilman Leslie Gross, who voted for the installation in September, voted to have them removed. He said the signs were "somewhat of a nuisance."

Councilman Mike Brown, who has opposed new stop signs here, jokingly said he'd like to give a "citizen of the year award" to the motorist who ripped out the stop sign last month.

Public works crews probably will remove the stop signs this week.

One-way street plan dumped by City Council

The Carmel City Council took a U-turn Monday evening on a one-way street proposal. Instead of rerouting the downtown traffic, the council revived a committee to study limiting truck delivery hours to early mornings. Double-parked delivery trucks again were blamed for Carmel's traffic tie-ups.

The ad hoc committee, chaired by Councilman Leslie Gross, met once since it was appointed by Mayor Gunnar Norberg in November 1977. Gross said he will schedule another meeting this month. Three Carmel businessmen also sit on the committee along with Police Chief William Ellis.

The council rejected recommendations from the Carmel Planning Commission and its traffic and circulation subcommittee that favored one-way streets. Instead, it listened to three Carmel residents who said delivery trucks were the real problem.

"We may be focusing on the wrong issue," said Thomas O. Stratton. He suggested limiting trucks to morning deliveries instead of establishing one-way streets.

"The trucks are where the real problem is," agreed June Wood. One-way streets would be "a detriment to the community," added Howard Nieman.

"One-way streets attack the symptoms, but not the cause," said Commissioner Robert Stephenson, who formerly supported the one-way proposal. He said he now favors limiting truck deliveries.

"Unless we get some legal backing, my opinion is we'll have a confrontation with the business community and truckers," said Gross. After the meeting Gross said he would like to see all truck deliveries completed here before noon. "There will be some very unhappy people here no matter what we do," he said.

Post office is renamed

At the request of the Carmel City Council, U.S. Postal Service officials have agreed to rename the new post office at the Carmel Rancho Shopping Center the "Carmel Ranch post office." It previously was called the "Carmel post office."

The post office on Fifth and Dolores will remain the Carmel-by-the-Sea post office." It will be a branch of the new Carmel Rancho post office. The council was informed Monday evening of a letter from J. W. Lautenberger, manager at the U.S. Postal Service western region headquarters in San Bruno, that contained the news.

"I'd like to see it named 'that place between Carmel and Big Sur somewhere near Carmel Valley,' " joked Councilman Howard Brunn.

Construction of the new post office began last week. It is scheduled for completion in July.

between Fifth and Seventh avenues and Mission and Monte Verde. There are 10 restaurants in the district that serve cocktails.

No new restaurants that serve drinks would be allowed in the service commercial district (C-1-S). It covers a two-block perimeter around the central business district and has six restaurants that serve cocktails.

Noise from restaurants that serve cocktails is a deterrent to apartment construction in the business district, the subcommittee said in a report. The Carmel General Plan calls for a mixture of apartments and commercial uses in the business district, the findings point out.

Owners of an apartment two floors above the Hog's Breath Inn recently requested permission to convert to commercial use. The noise from the busy restaurant below made it difficult to rent the apartment, owners said. The commission denied that request because third floor businesses are illegal in Carmel.

WE COULD AVOID what we had when Toots Lagoon began stirring up trouble," Stephenson also said. Shortly after the restaurant opened two years ago, commissioners claimed that the back portion was being used as a bar. They ordered most of the bar furniture removed.

"Considering the number of restaurants already in town, I don't feel this would be any great hardship," Stephenson said of the proposal.

At least one restaurateur disagrees. "It leaves me with a worthless bar," said Steve McComb, owner of the Hacienda restaurant. He made the remark about law books and trucks. The proposed law would prevent him from serving cocktails in his restaurant.

McComb opened his restaurant on Dolores and Fifth in July. McComb has a license to sell beer and wine, but not distilled spirits. Under the proposed ordinance, McComb could not serve mixed drinks there because his restaurant is located outside the central business district.

"I bought the restaurant with the intent of increasing my business and growing. Had the council told me its intentions at the beginning, I'd have never decided on this place," McComb said.

Stephenson has advocated controls on liquor-serving restaurants for two years. In 1976, he tried to convince the City Council that Carmel had too many restaurants serving cocktails. Carmel has more restaurant liquor licenses per capita than any other city in Monterey County, he told the council. His study showed that Carmel had less than 2 per cent of county population, but more than 12 per cent of the liquor licenses. It did not take into account the thousands of tourists who visit here each year.

THE CITY Council has threatened various restaurant bans in Carmel. Two have been proposed in the past two years. Both were tabled.

Mayor Gunnar Norberg and Councilman Mike Brown proposed restrictions in 1977 that would have spaced restaurants at least 500 feet apart. In January, the council rejected a proposal requiring restaurants to provide one parking space for each four seats. If space for the parking was not provided, owners would have had to pay a $13,750 fee for each space. Carmel City Attorney George Brehmer said the proposed ordinance was unconstitutional.

Motorist survives crash at statue

A 23-year-old Carmel woman is in satisfactory condition at Community Hospital after her car went out of control and struck the retaining wall beneath the Father Serra statue at Serra Avenue and Camino del Monte on Monday morning.

Renee Ann Marie Olson, of Dolores and Third, was taken to the hospital with head injuries by Carmel Fire Department ambulance after she was freed from her car using the Jaws of Life rescue tool.

According to the California Highway Patrol, the accident occurred at 3:45 a.m. when Miss Olson was driving westbound on Serra Avenue at "a high rate of speed." Her car went off the road at the intersection of Dolores and Camino del Monte and crashed into the stone wall and a tree beneath the Serra statue.

The statue itself was not damaged.

Units from County Service Area 43, the Monterey County Sheriff's office and the CHP responded to the call.

Dogs face new 'shovel ordinance'

The Carmel City Council may put a "shovel ordinance" between dogs and the yards and sidewalks they mar. The item is on the agenda for next Monday's meeting.

The ordinance would require pet owners to remove droppings their charges leave in any business or residential district. It would apply to both dog and cat owners. Offenders could be fined $50.

The city is constantly receiving written and telephone complaints from residents who object to animal droppings, according to City Administrator Jack Collins. Complaints have been piling up, he said, prompting the ordinance to be drafted.

The ordinance passed its first reading last Monday on a 4-0 vote. It caused Carmel Police Chief William Ellis to comment, "Just so police don't have to gather the evidence."

Dressage show planned Saturday

The Carmel Valley chapter of the California Dressage Society will present its fourth annual Fall Dressage Show Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 11-12, at Stonegate Stables, Los Robles Road, Carmel Valley. Show hours will be 7 a.m.-5 p.m. both days.

Lisolette Fore of Menlo Park will judge entries from all parts of Northern and Central California. Riders will compete in all levels of dressage through Prix St. Georges.

Dressage is based on the classical tenets of horsemanship. It seeks to produce a calm, obedient horse which moves forward freely and is perfectly attuned to the commands of its rider. At its highest levels, it produces the breathtaking spectacle of the dancing movements of piaffe and passage and the demanding "airs above the ground" as practiced by the Spanish Riding School of Vienna.

Spectators are welcome. There is no charge for admission.

A snack bar will operate all day, hot luncheon will be served 11 a.m.-2 p.m. and champagne will be available. Ample parking will be provided.

Stonegate Stables is just off the Los Laureles Grade Road, approximately 10 miles east of Highway 1 on Carmel Valley Road.

For more information, phone 659-3223.

Call made for directors at Carmel Forest Theater

The Forest Theater Guild, which operates the outdoor Forest Theater in Carmel, is seeking directors for its 1979 summer season.

The Guild will produce two plays running five weekends. Each will start in June. Following last year's format, the Guild plans at least one Shakespearean play. Plays will be chosen jointly by the selected director and the Guild board of governors.

Interested persons should write to Alan Brenner, 1 Portola Plaza, Monterey 93940 for application information. The deadline for applications is Wednesday, Nov. 15.

Twain show opening

A one-man show, Guess Who's Coming to Dinner Tonight—Mark Twain, That's Who, will open Friday, Nov. 10, at the Studio Theatre/Restaurant, Dolores between Ocean and Seventh, Carmel. Dinner is at 7 and curtain at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday; both are one hour earlier Sunday.

Karl Elliot Endicott stars in the show, which was conceived and directed by Larry Jardine. Endicott creates his illusion with no makeup and no props other than the famous ice cream suit so characteristic of Twain.

Endicott, who attended the University of Utah, is now a sculptor at the Monterey Sculpture Studio.

The show is the first to be presented by Constance Curtis and Jedediah Horner, new owners of the theater.

The time was 1:27.21. The meet was during the last weekend of October at Gilroy.

Ten-year-old Greg Falge captured firsts with lifetime best times of 33.25 in the 50-yard freestyle and 3:06.40 in the 200-yard individual medley. Other first-place finishers were Josh Hardy, 10, in the 50-yard butterfly and Brett Langley, 13, in the 100-yard backstroke.

Carmel audience roars

Attorney aims a humorous broadside at the EPA

RONALD A. Zumbrun, president of the public-supported Pacific Legal Foundation, regaled Carmel Rotary Club members last week with stories he tells about misguided bureaucrats and environmentalists. Both are favorite targets of the organization.

Established in 1973, the Sacramento-based foundation has filed more than 150 lawsuits it believed to be in the public interest. Zumbrun spent about a half hour at the Wednesday club luncheon tracing its history with anecdotes. Most of them had punch lines.

Talking about its successful 1973 suit that forced the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to briefly lift the DDT ban, Zumbrun said the court delay put foresters in a race to spray wooded regions in the Pacific Northwest before an infestation of Tussock moths damaged the trees. He said the DDT killed the moths, but a University of Washington professor studied the aftermath and concluded the spray had killed 200,000 birds.

"He went out to one acre of property where 100,000 acres had been sprayed and he found two dead songbirds. Two dead songbirds times 100,000 acres is 200,000," said Zumbrun as the audience chuckled.

There were gales of laughter when he added, "The cause of death is yet to be ascertained."

ZUMBRUN SAID the foundation has been involved in suits to overturn the EPA ban on use of the sewage outfall into Santa Monica Bay. Without direct comment about its merits, Zumbrun offered a story about faulty logic in the protection of endangered species.

"Seven miles out into the Santa Monica Bay, near the outfall, the brown pelican, an endangered species, has been spotted," said Zumbrun.

"The brown pelican lives off anchovies and in Los Angeles anchovies are fed solely by sludge. A gray whale has been spotted passing through Santa Monica Bay on its annual jaunt and in that area the gray whale eats plankton. In Santa Monica Bay, plankton is fed solely by sludge," he said.

Zumbrun said sewage sludge, by order of the EPA, must be hauled inland and used for fill, while according to his account, marine life depends on it in the Los Angeles area.

Adding to the story, Zumbrun quipped, "The site where the trucks operate has been found to be the sole habitat of the El Segundo blue butterfly, an endangered species."

While the audience still was laughing, Zumbrun added, "You'll be proud to know that two weeks ago, we filed a suit in federal court arguing that the Endangered Species Act can't stop that path of pipe from providing nutrients to marine life in Santa Monica Bay." The audience roared.

Zumbrun told the Rotarians his organization opposes what he called "the elitist approach to no growth, down-zoning, small is beautiful, progress is bad." The money, he said comes from foundations and private contributions by law firms, businesses and individuals. He said the Lily Foundation, established by the pharmaceutical corporation, has given $20,000, or about 2 per cent of the legal foundation's yearly budget.

HE POKED fun at the Diamond Lane fiasco in 1977 that caused monumental tie-ups on the Santa Monica Freeway in Los Angeles. It was designed to encourage commuters to join carpools or ride the bus.

"That was the social engineering project taken on by the state of California to take the world's busiest freeway and make it so intolerable to drive that the public would shift into some other form of transportation that was not yet available," Zumbrun said flatly.

"We finally argued that the state could not have this project because they had failed to prepare an environmental impact report," Zumbrun said. The audience roared again.

State transportation officials dismantled the project after about two weeks. It allowed buses and cars with at least three passengers to use the inner lanes on the eight-lane freeway. The lane usually was clear, but the other three on each side were bumper-to-bumper during the commuter rush.

Zumbrun received prolonged applause and one member shouted above the noise, "I want to congratulate you and pledge $100."

Jody Le Towt, owner of Le Bistro restaurant in Carmel, recently returned from a one-week vacation with his wife, Dianne, and their two sons Jeffrey, 9, and Eric, 8. The trip included three states and the nation's capital.

Their first stop was Washington, D.C., where they "did what most tourists do," he said. They toured the White House, the Lincoln and Washington memorials and the National Art Gallery, but the favorite stop for Eric and Jeffrey was the Smithsonian Institution Aerospace Museum.

After a short visit there, they visited Jody's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Zigmont Le Towt, in Bethlehem, Penn., where he grew up. He showed his sons the schools he attended and his favorite spots in the town.

But that wasn't the end of their week. They timed the trip so they could attend Jody's 20th class reunion at West Point Academy in New York. While there, they saw the football game between Army and Colgate University, the parade of cadets and then toured the campus.

Their last stop was Bel Air, Md., where his sister Susan Peverley, owns a farm. "The boys hadn't been back since they were infants so it was their first experience riding on tractors, corn combines and playing in the hay mounds," Jody said.

A DAUGHTER, Jessica Manke, was born Oct. 17 at Community Hospital to Dr. and Mrs. Christopher Manke of Carmel.

The 7-pound 12-ounce girl is their first child. "She has lots of brown hair and looks like her father," Mrs. Manke said.

Her first visitors were Dr. and Mrs. Wilbert C. Manke of Carmel, her paternal grandparents. Driving here from Atherton were her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Norris Everett.

Father and grandfather are dentists who share a practice in Carmel. Christopher was raised in the Carmel area and attended Carmel High School.

AN OLDSMOBILE pulled in front of artist Keith Lindberg's Carmel Highlands home recently and when the door opened Betty Ford stepped out.

A few minutes earlier Lindberg had received a telephone call alerting him the former First Lady would arrive to choose a painting, a gift from Darius Keaton of Pebble Beach, for the Fords' 30th wedding anniversary.

Lindberg said Mrs. Ford was accompanied by secret service agents, but was friendly, mainly talking about her boys.

Mrs. Ford chose a modernistic single-figure drawing.

"There was nothing magic about the meeting," Lindberg remarked. "It was just people meeting people."

The Fair Ladies of Carmel get into a Christmas rush

THE FAIR LADIES of Carmel are very busy right now. In a score of homes around town, the members are sewing, cutting, pasting and painting morning and night.

All their work comes to fruition next Thursday, when 500 invited guests line up for the Ladies' pre-Christmas party to buy the gifts and decorations they made during the past year.

All this has been going on for 15 years now. And for each of those years, every cent the Fair Ladies raised has been given to charity.

Every Wednesday morning, they gather at the Hatton Road home of Katherine Goode to work on various projects. They share tea and friendship and produce things of beauty: satin balls to hang on Christmas trees, tiny beaded bells, miniature trees, doll houses, jewelled eggs, posters, wall hangings, dolls, jewelry. The list goes on and on.

The Fair Ladies originally organized to earn money for All Saints' Day School in Carmel Valley. Now the main recipient of their aid is Hartnell College, where they provide scholarship money to the nursing program. All Saints' still gets assistance, as does Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

Mrs. Goode said the members try to donate money to groups without other sources of funds or for emergency expenses during the year.

Asked how much the club contributes overall, she smiled coyly and said, "We don't tell how much. We tell who."

THE GROUP STARTED because Mrs. Goode and Mary Brunette wanted to put their talents in arts and crafts to work for charitable causes. There were six other Fair Ladies working by the time of the first sale: Gladys Jones, Anita Parker, Mrs. Morris Sheldon, Mrs. Robert Reynolds, Mrs. William Ballard and Helen Soule.

Now the group numbers 20, ranging in age from their 50s to past 80.

New Fair Ladies are recruited by existing members. All it takes to be a Fair Lady, Mrs. Goode said, is to "have talent" and be recommended by a member.

"It's a friendship thing," she said. "It's good socially, it's good philanthropically. It's therapeutic for many of us.

'It's therapeutic for many of us,' she said

"Fun is a great point. We enjoy each other. And we all learn a great deal from each other."

They swap techniques for making the various items sold at the annual party. They work jointly on projects. They plan and organize the party itself.

Originally, the sales were at Mrs. Goode's home. But as they grew in popularity, the house proved to be too small. Now, the tea and gift sale takes place at the Carmel Woman's Club, Ninth and San Carlos. Lines form before the 10 a.m. start of the sale and Mrs. Goode said the best items usually are gone by noon.

And when the last handmade wreath or Christmas basket is gone, the ladies head home to relax for a few days. But only until Wednesday morning, when they gather again to prepare for Christmas 1979.

Business people

A way to stay in Asian art

The Jade Tiger Gift Shop was opened recently in Vandervort Court on San Carlos and Seventh, Carmel, by husband and wife Robert and Pei Feng Ivanoff.

Their life in Asia was the decisive factor in opening an oriental shop here. Pei Feng is Chinese and spent most of her life in Taiwan where she was a school teacher. Robert, who is a technical sergeant in the U.S. Air Force, met his wife while stationed in Taiwan. They were married five years ago.

"It was a natural transition for us," Robert said. They already had started a collection of art objects, clothing and furnishings. Since they wanted to settle in the area, Robert said Carmel was the most promising site for an Asian gift store.

Aside from the demands of a new business, Robert is working full time in the military and recently completed graduation requirements for a bachelor's degree in business administration at Golden Gate University in Monterey.

That leaves Pei Feng minding the store during the day with the assistance of their 4-year-old daughter, Patty.

Buyer, decorator combine work

On Sept. 31, Richard and Ronnie Cushman moved into their new home in Carmel Valley and the next day walked into their recently purchased store, Song of Siam, in Carmel Plaza.

The Cushmans moved here from Bethesda, Md. Ronnie was an interior decorator there and Richard was a buyer for the 14-store chain, Britcher of Georgetown.

While managing an interior design showroom, Ronnie learned about Oriental art and decor. She said she worked with many clients coordinating their homes in the Far Eastern stylings.

Meanwhile, her husband had begun buying Oriental clothing and gift items for Georgetown and for their own home.

Ronnie said because of their busy schedules, they rarely saw one another. After visiting the Peninsula several times, they decided they "wanted to be in Carmel," she said.

After discovering Song of Siam was for sale, they decided it would be the shop to put their knowledge of Oriental designs to use.

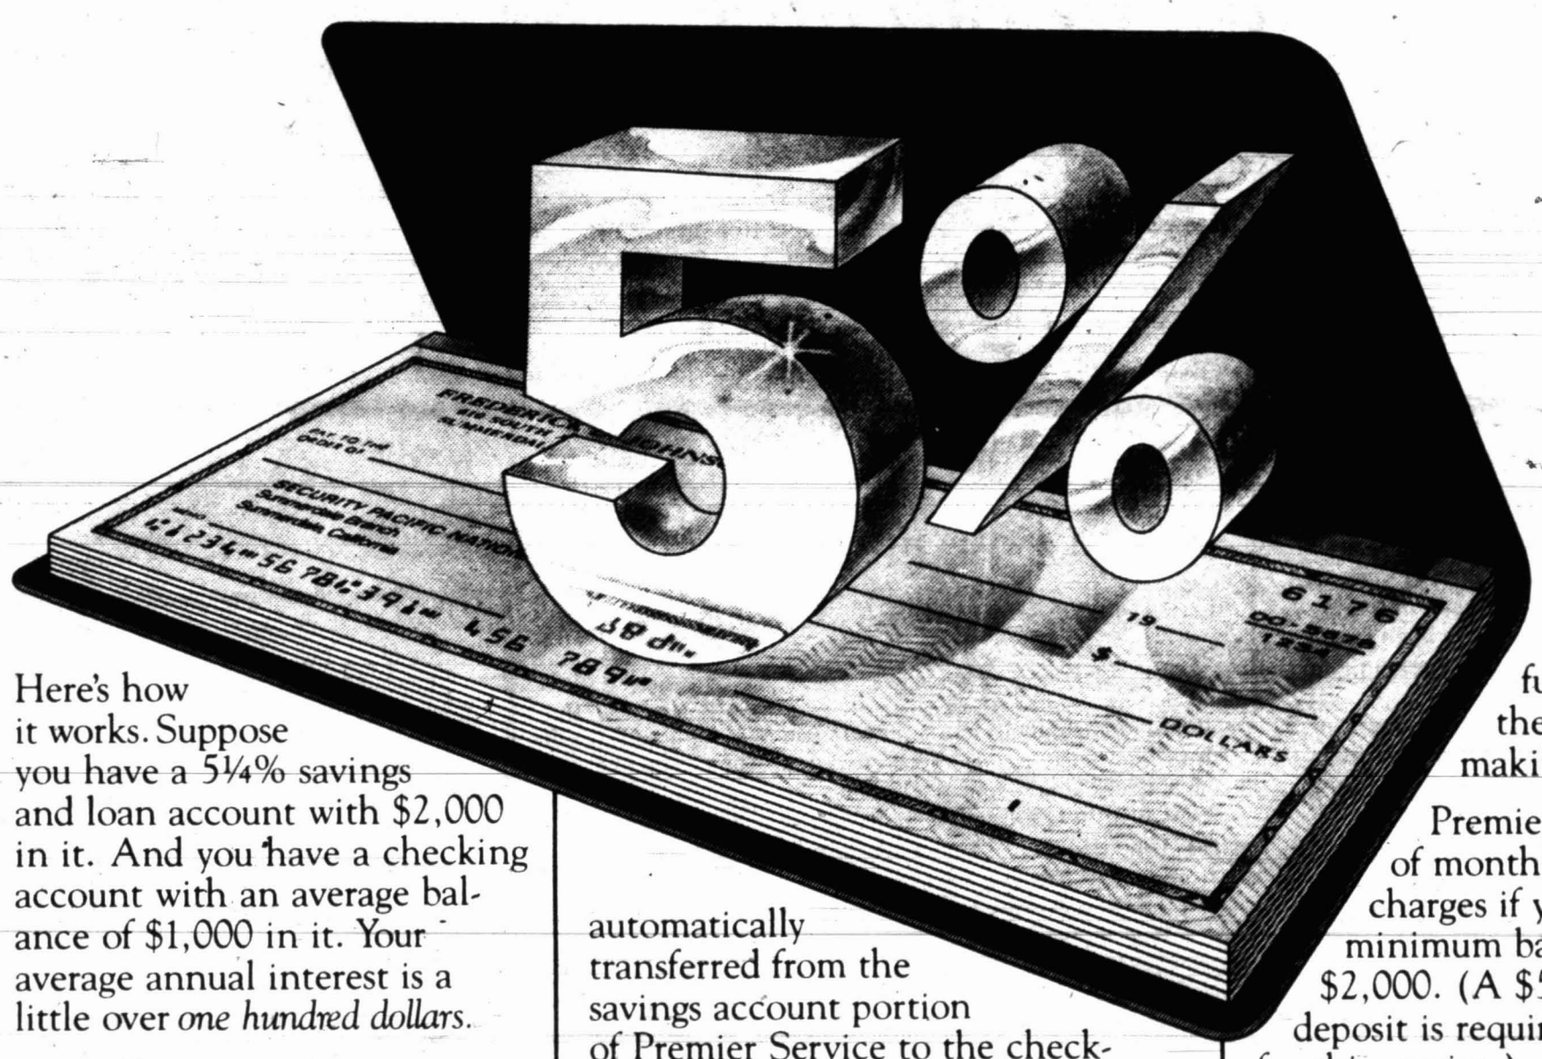
How our new 5% Premier Service can pay you more than a 5¼% savings and loan account.



Here's how it works. Suppose you have a 5¼% savings and loan account with $2,000 in it. And you have a checking account with an average balance of $1,000 in it. Your average annual interest is a little over one hundred dollars.

Now. Suppose you took the same total amount of $3,000 and put it in Security Pacific Bank's new Premier Service. Your average annual interest will be a little over one hundred and fifty dollars. The reason is that Premier Service pays interest on every cent that you don't actually use for writing checks. (Our free Interest Comparison Chart will give you some interesting comparisons.)

Premier Service is really two accounts under one account number. So when you write a check, that amount of money is automatically transferred from the savings account portion of Premier Service to the checking account portion. In other words, your checking account only has money in it at the instant you need to write a check. The rest of your funds remain in the savings portion, making money for you.

Premier Service is free of monthly service charges if you maintain a minimum balance of $2,000. (A $500 initial deposit is required to qualify for this service.)

Every month, you'll receive an easy-to-understand statement showing your interest earned, your balance and your cleared checks. Interest is compounded daily and paid monthly!

Premier Service is another reason to do all your banking at the bank you don't have to think about. Come in today and ask for our free INTEREST COMPARISON CHART and see how much you can earn by taking your money out of a savings and loan and putting it into Premier Service at Security Pacific Bank.

Garden club goal: The greening of black thumbs

By KEN PETERSON

SO YOU THOUGHT garden clubs were for women in print dresses who sit around once a week in someone's backyard sipping lemonade and comparing notes on roses?

Well, think again.

The Men's Garden Club of the Monterey Peninsula is 12 years old and thriving. With more than 30 members from the Peninsula, primarily Carmel and Carmel Valley, it offers advice and assistance for anyone from the advanced horticulturist to the rank amateur with a black thumb.

Dr. George Webster of Carmel Valley joined the club when he retired from his Bay Area medical practice three years ago. He now is the secretary and treasurer of the organization.

"The club largely consists of real amateurs," Webster said. "I'm surprised sometimes at how little we know."

He is quick to exempt some club members, men like Fred Bell who is a former president of the local Begonia Society.

But the common tie that binds the members together is an interest in gardening and the desire to learn more about it.

THE MEMBERS MEET once a month in the garden room at Brinton's Hardware Store at the mouth of Carmel Valley. They hear a talk on some aspect of gardening: a specific plant, propagation techniques, mulching and the like.

They also have workshop sessions at the homes of club members to learn gardening techniques through demonstrations and experience.

The club has a semi-annual plant sale. Money from the sale goes toward charitable projects, Webster said. The club's latest project was tilling and landscaping the grounds at the Blind and Visually Impaired Center in Pacific Grove. In cooperation with the Cypress Garden Club, it has created a touch and smell garden for the blind, complete with braille identification signs on the plants.

The Peninsula garden club also enters an exhibit each year at the Monterey County Fair. Webster said it generally takes one of the top theme prizes. Field trips and holiday parties also are regular club activities.

Gardening draws together a diverse group of people, Webster said. One of the club founders was an acrobat, while others, like himself, come from the professions.

"It's basically a retired men's club," he said, adding that club lectures draw "as many women as men."

The club activities let someone who has an idea they might like gardening get more involved, Webster said.

"About 50 per cent drop out in the first year," he said.

NOT SURPRISINGLY, most of the men first get interested in vegetable gardening rather than flowers, Webster said. Once they're hooked, the whole realm of the plant world opens up.

"This area is as blessed for ornamental horticulture as any place in the entire United States," he said. "In the Carmel Valley and Salinas, it gets warm. In Carmel, they have the foggy climate."

Webster himself has a variety of native plants growing on the hillside behind his home. But he also has branched out, building his own greenhouse for African violets. He calls it a hedge against the day he doesn't want to go out and dig in the garden any more.

Webster said the club gets a lot of support from nurseries on the Peninsula. They don't feel threatened by gardeners raising plants themselves, he said. In fact, he said, they believe the added interest in gardening increases sales of plants and nursery supplies.

The only time they are in head-to-head competition is during club plant sales. The club members' plants, propagated from cuttings, may not always look as healthy as nursery plants, but Webster believes they have another selling point.

"They were grown by someone like you. If they've survived, they can grow anywhere."

Solo concerts dominate Carmel Classic Guitar Festival

By SCOTT MacCLELLAND

THE THIRD CARMEL Classic Guitar Festival was dominated by two solo concerts. The quantum leap from the guitar's intimate domain to a high-profile theater event was achieved Friday night by Manuel Barrueco and on Sunday by Jorge Morel.

Of a similar level of energy was the Pena Latinoamericana, a Sunday afternoon affair involving six musicians and featuring the Paraguayan harp of Jesse Pessoa. The other concerts offered considerable variety and much high quality playing.

Music corner

Jorge Morel portrays a maverick mastery. While he is no purist, his sparkling and colorful technique were brought to bear on always musical and often adventuresome expressions. His program was comprised mostly of his own compositions and arrangements. His pieces are of a basic simplicity but are finely wrought. He indulges a certain fascination for harmonic spices that include an occasional pungeant dissonance. The songlike pieces are simple but not plain; they are lovely.

SOME OF THE outstanding moments of Morel's concert were an animated Paraguayan dance imitating a harp galopa by Pablo Escobar, Misionera by Bustamante, Morel's own arrangement in Latino rhythm of Grieg's Anitra's Dance, and Asturias by Albeniz. There were moments when fingering and rhythms were not totally clear but Morel's presence and personality were unmistakable.

A favorite from last year's festival, George Sakellariou, gave a clean but uninspired performance Saturday night. Following three solo pieces, he collaborated with Carolyn Caton who brought dusky and expressive singing to Falla's Seven Spanish Popular Songs. But Sakellariou chose the role of accompanist rather than partner. The result was that the singer carried the music to the audience while the guitarist almost kept it to himself. Further, some of the songs bespeak Falla's innate orchestral and dramatic sense, though Sakellariou confined these seeds to drawing room proportions.

The evening's second collaboration was the world premiere of Sherwood Shaffer's Trio for Flute, Violin and Guitar of 1973. Sakellariou was joined by flutist Ray Fabrizio and violinist David Schneider and the calibre of musicianship was of the highest order. Unfortunately, the piece was not. The combination of instruments and the simplicity of most of the music made for sweet sonorities, but the work does a poor job of concentrating its thematic material in a well-structured whole. The richness of its pages passed around the players but did not sustain for any of them over the long run. Often the guitar only strummed a repititious chordal accompaniment to linear melodic writing for flute and violin. The work's animated finale offered the most integrated music of all and even that sometimes lapsed into an artless simplicity.

AFTER INTERMISSION, Sakellariou played Spiritual by Peter Madlem, who was present. It is a pretty piece that would well serve a scene in a romantic movie. Next was Bach's Lute Suite in D, based on the Cello Suite in G. Sakellariou gave this great work an immaculate and lackluster performance. There followed four pieces by Barrios and two encores, Cancion y Danza by Ruiz-Pipo and an arrangement of Motherless Child.

The Pena Latinoamericana was an exciting program by Richard Stover and Los Gringos de Santa Cruz, including the well-known local cellist, Roger Emanuels. There were many splendid ensemble pieces and arrangements, but the star attraction was the Paraguayan harp of Jesse Pessoa. The sweet sounds of this instrument and its characteristic galopa rhythms were an irresistable delight. Pessoa was a virtuoso and in Pajaro Campana he further seduced his audience with an extensive show of glissandi, another characteristic mode of this music. In one of the encores, Milk Train, Pessoa used the harp to paint all the pictorial effects of a train engine that Villa Lobos gave to a full orchestra in Little Train of the Caipira.

Later on Sunday afternoon, Alice Artzt played a solo recital which included classical works, Spanish arrangements of baroque and romantic pieces, and works by two contemporary English composers. Her playing and manner on stage were most attractive. She took a generally intimate view of guitar performance and brought much refinement and expression to the program. Especially nice were two Fernando Sor works, Fantasy on "Ye Banks and Braes" and Marche Funebre, and pieces and arrangements by Tarrega.

The 1977 festival competition winner, David Tanenbaum, played a fine concert on Friday afternoon. This young man has a high order of technical mastery though as yet a style of expression has not tempered his playing.

On Saturday afternoon famed guitarists Jose Rey de la Torre gave delightful personal recollections of his teacher, Miguel Llobet. De la Torre was a teenager when he went from his native Cuba to Barcelona to study with Llobet in the early 1930s. In those days, as de la Torre put it, the classical guitar was as much a novelty in Spain and Cuba as it was in the United States. Llobet also was the subject of a scholarly discourse by Ronald Purcell, author and guitar professor at UC Northridge.

Jeff Linsky and his left-handed bassist, Randy Seybold, played a program on Saturday afternoon, following de la Torre's talk. Linsky plays mostly his own compositions which are of a facile cocktail hour character. He is a fine musician and the program was entertaining.

Many of the festival programs were dedicated to the memory of Bunyon Webb, well-known West Coast guitarist who died recently in a scuba diving accident.

Newmann has lived in Santa Fe, N.M., since 1972, prior to which he lived for 10 years on the Monterey Peninsula. He was born in Europe and grew up in South America.

In 1971 he joined a group of artist friends to establish a gallery at 591 Lighthouse, Pacific Grove, which served during its brief existence as a showcase for work not otherwise visible in local galleries.

Since 1975, he has shown widely in New Mexico and neighboring areas. His work has been included in museum shows in his home state as well as in Colorado, Nevada and Texas. In 1976 he had his first one-man show at the Bob Tomlinson Gallery in Albuquerque, and since then has had one-man shows twice at the Clarke-Benton Gallery in Santa Fe. Recently his work was selected to hang in three exhibitions of the Santa Fe Festival of the Arts.

On display in the Leonard Heller Memorial Gallery during November are black-and-white drawings by Christine Lardon based on organic forms and the flow of natural forces.

Miss Lardon studied at the Boston Museum School of Fine Arts, the Carnegie Institute of Technology and the Atlanta School of Art. Her work has been exhibited at the Miami Museum of Modern Art, the Palace of the Legion of Honor in San Francisco and the Rochester Art Center in Minnesota.

Mills one-man show opens Saturday at Lupetti Gallery

Art of the American Scene, a collection of works by guest artist Scott B. Mills, will open Saturday, Nov. 11, at the Lupetti Gallery in the Seven Arts Building Courtyard, Lincoln between Ocean and Seventh, Carmel. The show will open with an artist's reception, which will also celebrate the gallery's first anniversary, from 6 to 9 p.m.

Mills was born in 1947 in Detroit and moved to California with his family when he was very young. He graduated from San Diego State University with a degree in the social sciences and was immediately commissioned an officer in the Marine Corps. After his discharge in 1972, he went to work as a salesman for Pfizer Inc.

"I taught myself how to paint," he says, "by studying the art of Rembrandt, Andrew Wyeth and Norman Rockwell and the many great painters of my art library. Under the tutelage of David Lawrence I was taught the many subtleties of fine art composition and style, all of which I have tried to incorporate into my own work."

Mills received an honorable mention in the San Bernardino County Museum Traditional Art Show in 1963 and was accepted in the show in 1975, 1976 and 1977. He has had a painting published on the cover of the Marine Corps Gazette Anniversary Issue in 1978 and placed second nationally in the Saturday Evening Post Cover Contest.

He has had two one-man shows in San Bernardino.

Gallery hours are 11 a.m.-5:30 p.m. daily. For more information, phone 625-1281.

Robinson seascapes on view at Zantman Art Galleries

A one-man show of new seascapes by E. John Robinson will open Saturday, Nov. 11, at Zantman Art Galleries, Sixth and Mission, Carmel, with an artist's reception from 6 to 9 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend.

"Often," says G. J. Zantman, "a showing of seascapes is a monotonous and repetitious affair. Not so with E. John Robinson's work!

"Every one of his paintings is an excitingly different orchestration of the sea and the light he captures is a revelation."

Robinson grew up along the Oregon coast and began painting at an early age. Inspired by the spirit of the sea, his pioneer ancestors who struggled to make a living from it and an innate drive to create, he worked his way through art school. He attended the Cornish School of Art in Seattle, then transferred to the California College of Arts and Crafts in Oakland where he graduated with a bachelor's degree. He later earned his master's degree at San Francisco State University.

Robinson gave private painting lessons for many years, and when he no longer had time to teach, he wrote two books: Marine Painting in Oil and The Seascape Painter's Problem Book, published by Watson-Guptill of New York. He is currently working on a third book.

In one of the books, he says, "There is no substitute for first-hand knowledge of the sea. Whenever possible, I advise you to seek out the real teacher—the sea itself...Listen to the music of the moving water...let the moods of the sea be your moods and look for your moods in the sea.

"When I experience a beautiful moment by the sea, when it has given something very special, very personal, I then feel it is my destiny to communicate that feeling to you, to all of you who were not fortunate enough to have witnessed it. What better reason to paint?"

Robinson's paintings are shown at the Zantman Art Galleries in Carmel and Palm Desert and the Ruth Carlson Gallery of Mendocino. His paintings have appeared in magazines here and in England and he has twice painted covers for Reader's Digest. Since 1968, he has made his home near Mendocino, along one of the most rugged coastlines in the world.

Gallery hours are 11 a.m.-5 p.m. daily. For more information, phone 624-8314.

Group wildlife show opens at Americana

A group show of wildlife paintings and sculptures will open Saturday, Nov. 11, with a champagne artists' reception from 4 to 7 p.m. at Gallery Americana, Lincoln and Sixth, Carmel. Everyone is welcome to attend.

Artists whose works are included in the show are Gary Swanson, Clark Bronson, Pat Smoot, Terry Frost, Margie Clancy, Jim Taylor, Leslie Harrison, Wayne Davis, Don Polland and Paul Tadlock. Several of the artists will attend the opening reception.

Swanson will show new oil paintings of the great animals of America and Africa. The artist, who has had several one-man shows at Gallery Americana, has won gold medals in professional wildlife painting competitions sponsored by the Franklin Mint Gallery and has been commissioned by the Franklin Mint Gallery and the World Wildlife Fund to do a portfolio of paintings of animals. He has also won a number of awards from the Wildlife Artists International.

Swanson's work in oil is preceded by 10 years of involvement in animal sculpture, taxidermy, work as a museum curator and travel to the natural habitats of animals around the world.

Limited edition bronze sculptures of birds and animals by Clark Bronson also will be shown. Bronson has won national honors for his watercolors and drawings as well as his sculpture and he has painted covers for Sports Afield and National Wildlife.

Miss Smoot's portrayals of African animals and landscapes in this show were inspired by a six-week trip to Kenya, Egypt and Morocco. She has had 22 one-woman shows and her works have been exhibited at the Triton Museum of Art, the Rosicrucian Egyptian Museum in San Jose and the Frye Museum in Seattle.

The Americana show is the first time Terry Frost, a British artist, will show his paintings of African animals in the United States. A graduate of St. Martins College of Art in London, Frost has worked as a free-lance illustrator and taught drawing and painting at West Sussex College of Art and Design.

Since he decided to specialize in wildlife painting, he has exhibited with the Society of Wildlife Artists and at the Mall Galleries and the Tryon Galleries in London. He visits Africa regularly to study the animals in their natural environment.

Gallery hours are 10:30 a.m.-5 p.m. daily.

Chamber concert Wed. with Rogeri Trio

The Rogeri Trio, one of the few professional chamber ensembles devoted completely to the performance of piano trio literature, will appear in a concert at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 15, at Sunset Center, San Carlos and Ninth, Carmel.

The concert is presented by the Chamber Music Society of the Monterey Peninsula.

On the program will be Trio in B Flat Major, Opus 8, by Brahms; Trio in E Major K. 542 by Mozart and a Charles Ives trio.

Three young Baltimore musicians formed the Rogeri Trio in 1976. Barbara Weintraub is the pianist; Karen Clarke is the violinist; and Carter Brey is the cellist. All three are graduates of the Peabody Conservatory and, in addition to their performances as a trio, have performed as soloists in recitals and with symphony orchestras.

The Rogeri Trio participated in the 1976 Chamber Music Festival of Yale University at Norfolk and was invited to be a resident ensemble at the International Chamber Music Festival in Stockbridge, Mass. They have performed in many cities in the East and the Midwest. The concert Wednesday will be their first on the West Coast.

Tickets, for balcony seats only, will be available at the box office on the evening of the performance. Admission is $4.50 for adults and $2.50 for students and military personnel.

Carmel wins girls' swim championship

By JAY POSNER

THE CARMEL HIGH School girls' swim team won the Mission Trail Athletic League championship Saturday at Carmel, defeating three other teams.

The final scores were, Carmel 362, Pacific Grove 237, Santa Catalina 232, and Hollister 160.

New MTAL records were set by four individual Padre swimmers and one relay team. Cindy Frost and Kerry Neill each set two records, while Gail Frost and Stacey Hicks set one each. The Carmel 200 medley relay team of Frost, Frost, Neill and Mary McCreery also set a record.

The Padre frosh-soph team also won the league championship by rolling up 405 points, compared to 231 for Hollister, 223 for Santa Catalina and 4 for Pacific Grove.

MTAL frosh-soph records were set by two individual Padres and one relay team.

Suzy Hermanson set records in the 50 and 100 free events, while Kira Garrett set a record in the 50 butterfly. The Padre 200 medley relay team of Sarah Hicks, Beth Allard, Garrett and Hermanson also set a record.

The Padres go to the Central Coast section championships, scheduled for Nov. 17 and 18 at Gunderson High School in San Jose.

THE CARMEL HIGH School varsity football team will try to get back on the winning track Saturday when they host King City at 2 p.m. Last Friday, the Padres were edged by Palma, 7-0, in a game played at Salinas Municipal Stadium.

Carmel was inside the Palma 15 yard line twice during the game, but both times, disaster struck the hard-luck Padres.

After Palma had scored the only touchdown of the game, Padre quarterback John Lucido hit wide receiver Mark Nottenkamper with a 49-yard pass that put the ball on the Chieftain 14. However, three plays later, Charlie Johnson intercepted a Lucido pass and returned it to the 34.

Early in the fourth quarter, three receptions by Nottenkamper and one each by Cory Bliesner and Bruce Robinson brought the ball down to the Palma 5. On first down, Paul St. Germain scrambled down to the 1, but the Padres were pushed back four yards and Palma took over.

The Padres had one more chance late in the game, but Robinson fumbled a lateral from Steve Selle on the Padre 44 and Palma recovered with 45 seconds remaining in the game.

Palma's only touchdown came on a 52-yard touchdown pass from Steve Goldman to Nathan Olivas with 9:08 remaining in the third quarter. The extra point came on a kick by John Cailotto.

"We just got sucked in by the fake," Padre coach Frank Lynch said of the Palma touchdown. "It's tough to come so close and not get it. It would be different if we were getting blown out, but we haven't been."

The Carmel running attack was unable to move against Palma, but Lucido hit on 10 of 17 passes for 195 yards and Dean Turner threw one pass for 14 yards. Mark Nottenkamper led the receivers with seven receptions for 151 yards.

Palma was led by Randy Shade who rushed 23 times for 96 yards and Andy Hernandez who carried 10 times for 56 yards.

IN WATER POLO, Carmel remained undefeated by beating Soquel High School, 9-4, in a non-league match on Tuesday of last week at Carmel.

Adam Sherburne almost was the entire offense for the Padres. He scored seven of the nine goals. Carl Bresk tallied the other two scores for Carmel.

The Padres frosh-soph team, with a 6-3 record, also beat Soquel, 9-1. Bryan Baldwin scored four goals for Carmel while Dan Farrell and Mike Hardy each scored two goals. Mike LaFontaine tallied the other Padre score.

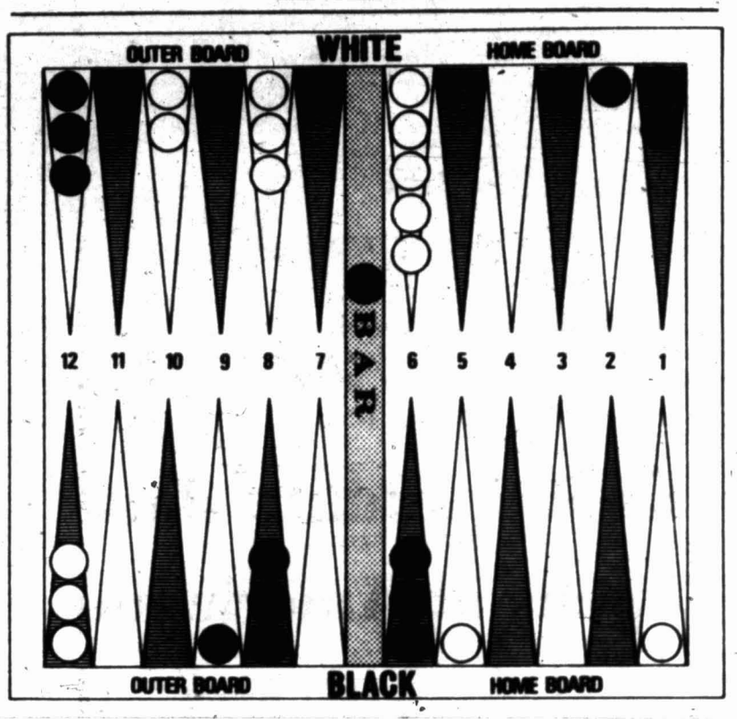
THE PADRE GIRLS' tennis team will close out the regular season today at 3:30 p.m. when they host Gonzales High School. Last Thursday, Carmel was defeated 5-2 by Aptos High School in a non-league match.

The doubles teams of Dara Bernstein and Cindy Landis and Laurie McGlochlin and Laura Tanous were the only Carmel players to score wins against a tough Mariner team which had defeated the Padres earlier this year. With their win, McGlochlin and Tanous remained undefeated in 11 matches.

Backgammon

By OMAR SHARIF



Black rolls 3-1. How should he play?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

It is very early in the game, but already Black has as many men in White's home board as does White. Black has rolled what would have been an excellent number had he not had a man on the bar. Now he must waste part of the roll by bringing in the man from the bar.

There is no question about whether it's better to bring in the man on the 3-point or the 1-point. There is no point to having a third man on White's 1-point, so it is clear that it is right to seize the White 3-point.

Before playing the 1, take a look at the position. It is beginning to look like a back game. However, there are still many rolls to go before a back game develops, and it is not clear that Black can hold his position long enough to allow a back game to do so.

Tactical considerations make it clear which 1 should be played. White is threatening to seize the Black 5-point, and Black should not surrender it without a fight. Therefore, use the 1 to hit the White blot on the Black 5-point.

That gives Black the best of both worlds. If White comes in and hits the Black blot on the 5-point, he will have slowed down Black's game considerably, and a back game becomes very feasible. If he does not hit the blot, Black has a good chance of covering it and can then switch to a blocking game.

Either way, White should do something to help Black make up his mind about what type of game to aim for.

Movies, concerts at Sunset Center

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, Sunset Community and Cultural Center

THE MUSICAL Theater Film Festival has selected 10 of the most renowned Broadway musicals and is presenting them starting Tuesday at 8 p.m. with Kiss Me Kate. Howard Keel and Kathryn Grayson are the stage couple starring in this musical version of The Taming of the Shrew. They find themselves acting out their parts in real life. Interpreting the superb Cole Porter score they have the help of long-legged Ann Miller who does a steamy version of Too Darn Hot, while comic thugs Whitmore and Keenan Wynn are standouts doing the comic Brush up Your Shakespeare. Watch for director Bob Fosse (Cabaret) as one of Miss Miller's partners. The delightful Wunderbar, So In Love with You Am I and the celebrated I Hate Men are prominent in this Porter score. Admission is $2. Tickets are available at the box office the night of the performance.

ON WEDNESDAY at 8 p.m., the Chamber Music Society will present the Rogeri Trio in a concert of music by Brahms, Mozart, and Ives. Formed in 1976 by three young Baltimore musicians, the Rogeri Trio is now enjoying its second full season of concerts. The itinerary for 1977-78 took the group up and down the East Coast and through cities and campuses in the Midwest. Debuts included the cities of New York, Chicago, Boston, Detroit, Providence, R.I., and San Antonio, Texas. Following its participation in the 1976 Yale at Norfolk Chamber Music Festival, the trio appeared as resident ensemble at the International Chamber Music Festival in Stockbridge, Mass. This past year, the Rogeri Trio has been in residence at Yale University where they have been featured with the Tokyo String Quartet and violist Raphael Hillyer in a series of the chamber music of Johannes Brahms. Tickets for balcony seats are available at the box office the night of the performance.

IN ITS CONTINUING series, the Brown Bag Cinema will present two informative films next Thursday at 1 p.m. In Hunters of the Seal, the story of the Netsilik Eskimo is told. Fifteen years ago, a Netsilik Eskimo would crouch motionless over a small breathing hole cut in the ice waiting for the seal below him. He had one chance to kill it. If he missed, he and his family might starve. If he caught the seal, he called his hunting partners together in a ceremony to appease the immortal soul of the dead seal before dividing it among the hunters and their families. But today the Netsilik no longer live this way. The efforts of the Canadian government to help the Netsilik have succeeded at the expense of their nomadic life. The Netsilik have settled down and now live in houses in Pelly Bay. Wholly dependent upon airlifted provisions for their survival, they are Christians now and no longer worry about the seals' immortal soul. Their new life is having a profound effect on the values and attitudes of the young who do not know the old ways.

IN AN AGE of film, is the theater dead? Renowned drama critic Walter Kerr in Walter Kerr on Theater, issues a resounding, "No!" But comparing film to theater, Kerr illuminates both. With him we watch scenes from five plays: Prometheus by Aeschylus, Shakespeare's Richard III, Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, the Pulitzer Prize-winning No Place to be Somebody (with members of the original off-Broadway cast), and the Open Theater's production of The Serpent. Though widely divergent, these plays vividly display what Kerr believes to be the essence of theater—portrayal of inner conflict. This is a personal provocative view of a major cultural form, an excellent introduction to units on theater or film. Bring a brown bag lunch and join us at noon. Sunset provides the coffee. Lunch is enjoyed on the terrace on the fine days and in the Chapman Room, room 4, when weather is inclement. At 1 p.m., all move to the Leonard Carpenter Hall, room 20, for about one hour of films.

OPENING NOV. 20 to run through Dec. 17 is the Marjorie Evans Gallery exhibition Between the Covers of Cricket Magazine. In this delightful and informative show of contemporary illustrations and covers from Volume III of Cricket magazine, 38 artists are represented by 50 drawings and paintings displayed which are only a sample of the Cricket collection of original art. The illustrators represented in this Cricket show are widely diverse in age, professional experience, and geographical location; but they have a few important things in common. They are interesting, thoughtful, lively and sometimes rather famous human beings. And, they are all fine artists dedicated to the craft and the challenge of illustrating the written word. It is with pride that we present Between the Covers of Cricket Magazine, the second traveling exhibition of art from Cricket's permanent collection. It will be on view each weekday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

CARMEL HIGH SCHOOL teacher Sue Williams will present a one-woman show of wall hangings and soft sculpture entitled "Rock Collection" at Fibres Gallery, 6c Fisherman's Wharf, Monterey. "I began as a painter and got tired of flat, regulated canvases," she said. "Fabric which has been enhanced with color and texture, then quilted and stuffed seems so much more pleasant to me. I still 'paint' on the cloth using dye, wax block prints, spray and applique to create the shapes. The shapes become familiar forms of a subjective nature: shells, fish and rocks."

Excellent acting in Staff Players show

By BARBARA MOUNTREY

THORNTON WILDER'S The Skin of Our Teeth is a play about the history of the human race currently being performed by the Staff Players of CET. A hit at its opening in 1942, it makes the basic statement that humanity is moving ever upward (the first act is set in "Excelsior," New Jersey). More interesting for its style than its content, the play juxtaposes such elements as the muses, a pet dinosaur, radio and the invention of the wheel in a setting that represents both contemporary suburban living and the coming of the Ice Age—and that's only Act. I. The second act represents the Deluge and is set in Atlantic City, at a convention of vertebrates; the third is the end of the Great War.

The production design by director Nick Hovick uses contemporary technology to highlight the symbolic content of the play, making use of tapes and excellent lighting effects by William Lewis. The technical effects work especially well in Act II.

THE ACTING is on the whole excellent, especially that of Henry Littlefield and Marcia Hovick as Mr. and Mrs. Antrobus, the parents of the human race. Their characterizations are strong, creating a contemporary equivalent of Adam and Eve, or Wotan and Fricka, he concerned with the invention of the wheel and the multiplication tables, she with the wedding ring and multiplication of the species. Julia Shumelda plays Sabina, the maid, as a character out of French farce with a Brooklyn Jewish accent, handling the pseudo-lapses into the part of an actress playing the maid very well.

Dwight Marshall is compelling as Cain, a driven young tough who represents all of man's inhumanity to man, and Christine Henrard is perfect as his angelic sister, aging just enough as she appears at the end with her own baby.

LOUISE WILSON is riveting as the Fortune Teller, the intensity of her pronouncements giving Act II much of its power. Her costume, by Loel Shuler, is brilliant in more than one sense; in fact, the costuming throughout is fine. The pale blue Muses, Homer, Hippocrates and Moses are quite effective, although the black-and-white faces are more reminiscent of a certain Star Trek episode than suggestive of humanity.

The many small roles in the play are all well done; Keith Decker is noteworthy as Homer, later as a conventioneer and still later as Mr. Tremayne, the Shakespearian actor.

Lance Jacobson's simple sets work well on the small stage, although it is unclear in the first and third acts just where the boundaries of the house are.

The Skin of Our Teeth is definitely worth seeing, not only because it is a serious play well performed, but also because ticket sales benefit the Children's Experimental Theatre.

The play will be on stage Saturday and Sunday at the York School, 9501 Monterey-Salinas Highway.

Napa, Sonoma wine harvest causes joy among vintners

By ROBERT LAWRENCE BALZER

THE LAST weeks of the pre-harvest season in Bordeaux had everyone crossing fingers that the rain would stay away until those precious Cabernet Sauvignon and Merlot grapes could be brought in. Vintage

The wine connoisseur

'78 in most parts of Europe will be good—not great. Germany, Italy and Champagne did not fare too well, but Bordeaux and Burgundy had the blessings of sunshine in those final days of harvesting.

The early spring in California brought so much rain that early mildew problems had the effect of some advance cluster-thinning up to as much as 10 per cent of the crop. But, according to most of the Golden State's vignerons, beneath the green canopy of abundant foliage from the generous rainfall, the vines put forth the most remarkable yield of not only good clusters but berries rich in flavor, fleshy and healthy, of all the fine varieties.

IN A WEEKEND tour, sniffing the heady fermenting air in eight wineries of the Sonoma and Napa valleys, peering into the open fermenters at Simi with winemaker Mary Ann Graf, measuring the temperature of the bubbling vat of Cabernet Sauvignon and tasting the wine on its way, we could appreciate her exhilaration.

At Souverain, winemaker Bill Bonetti was all smiles, despite weeks of 20-hour days. The model winery, with two million gallons of storage and fermentation facilities, was "filled to capacity for the first time," he told us.

At Alexander Valley Vineyards, right from the stainless steel vats, we tasted a still opaque Gewurztraminer, already delectable and easily indentifiable by its spicy, grapefruity, litchi-nut character. Like all the other winemakers we met, Hank Wetzell III was wreathed in smiles.

THE EXCITEMENT of the 1978 harvest is optimistically supported by wines of current release: white wines of 1976 and 1977 and reds of 1975 and 1976 of superb quality. They may well re-establish the California wine boom of the early '70s. Here are a few highlights:

Sonoma Vineyards: 1977 Chardonnay-River West Vineyards ($6.50). Already a gold medal winner from two fair judgings, available from a 10,000-case production, big enough to last (if your thirst will allow) and improve in proper cellarage for five years. Just enough oak. Restaurateurs would be advised to put in a year's supply now. 1974 Sonoma Vineyards Pinot Noir ($5.50) is evidence that California winemakers can succeed with this temperamental Burgundian grape. 1977 Sonoma Vineyards Johannisberg Riesling ($5.50) should really be called "White Riesling" for it does not recall the wines of the German Rheingau but has the delicacy which that grape produces in the vineyards of the Mosel, often unique in California. There is a modicum of residual sweetness, but not that late harvest amount which eliminates so many examples from service with foods. Don't overchill this delicate wine; let its gentle bouquet be released with merely cellar temperature chilling.

SOUVERAIN Cellars: 1977 Fume Blanc (Sauvignon Blanc) North Coast ($6). A long, silky, dry wine of appetizing intensity. Strictly Californian. The grape is of Loire lineage, but this wine establishes a mouth-filling, satisfying fullness which the often more delicate French vinifications do not have. 1975 North Coast Cabernet Sauvignon ($5), almost voluptuous in its sensory qualities, is perhaps the most outstanding value in California Cabernet currently on the market. It rivals the 1974 Souverain Sonoma Cabernet Sauvignon ($6), also available. It would be difficult to fault either wine. Both will not only please with present pouring but improve with aging for years to come. 1974 North Coast Pinot Noir ($4.50) will delight those Burgundy fanciers who enjoy the fruitiness of the Cote de Beaune wines of Monthelie. A ruby translucence and splendid finesse.

BUENA VISTA: 1977 Sonoma Pinot Chardonnay—Cabinet ($5.99). Rush to your wine merchant for this outstanding wine. It will make the wine-talk term "long" meaningful as opposed to "short" in taste. When the first swallow has slipped down your throat, the fullness of the wine will remain around your tastebuds like a silk wrapper. This comes from the slow cook and long fermentation by winemaster Rene Lacasia. Swirl the wine in your glass, and watch as the glycerol rivulets arch like cathedral windows on the side of the glass. Sometimes called the "legs" of the wine, this becomes the medium for that length of the wine, as one measure of greatness. It may be harder to find than the wines listed above, but it will be worth the search and buying by the case. Long, slow ripening of the golden grapes in the coolness of the Carneros region also had something to do with the majesty of this white Burgundy, more properly called Chardonnay, but we'll not quibble over the title. It scores 20/20 in our notes. Perfect is perfect.

(More outstanding wines from California next week.)

Brown Bag Cinema Nov. 16

Hunters of the Seal, a film that examines the negative effects of civilization on the Netsilik Eskimos, will be screened Thursday, Nov. 16, at the Brown Bag Cinema at Sunset Center, San Carlos and Ninth, Carmel. Everyone is welcome to attend the free program and gathering to share conversation and brown bag lunches at noon.

The film compares the old nomadic lifestyle of the Eskimos with the Canadian government's successful efforts to end their wandering ways by moving them into government housing in Pelly Bay.

Also to be screened is Walter Kerr on Theater, in which the drama critic answers the question, "Is the theater dead?" Scenes from five plays, including Prometheus by Aeschylus and The Importance of Being Earnest by Oscar Wilde will be shown as examples of the theater's essence—portrayal of inner conflict.

Brown baggers will meet on the terrace or in the Chapman Room during inclement weather. Movies begin in the Leonard Carpenter Hall, room 20, at 1 p.m.

For more information, phone 624-3996.

Harrison Memorial program

Library outreach gets books to shut-ins, students

HARRISON Memorial Library is situated on Ocean Avenue in Carmel, but through a special program its books reach out to the hands of shut-ins and schoolchildren who may never visit the building.

Allene Fremier directs the effort, finding books at the library and bringing them directly to homes, convalescent hospitals and schools as far away as Carmel Valley Village.

If a book is not available at Harrison Library, she will request inter-library loans from across the nation to serve a local resident.

The outreach program began on a small scale in 1976 when Mrs. Fremier was temporary children's librarian at Harrison. It expanded to its present size last fall.

"I did it to add to the use of books," she said.

Mrs. Fremier made arrangements with Carmel district school teachers to shuttle books to the campuses for students who couldn't get to Harrison Library or who couldn't find a particular book in their school library.

Often, the teacher would bring a class to the library itself and all the children would sign up for library cards, Mrs. Fremier said.

The school program grew to the point where she now takes as many as 300 books a month to different schools.

High school students get a lot of benefit from the program, according to Nellie Patchick, the librarian at Carmel High School. It often is difficult for them to use the research shelves of Harrison Library, she said.

The Carmel school district is large, she said, and many students come a long distance by bus. They may not have the opportunity to get to Harrison Library at lunch or after school for a research book the school library does not have.

THROUGH THE outreach program, the students have access to these books. They also learn to use their school libraries, Mrs. Fremier said, since outreach loans are handled through school librarians.

Shut-ins can get books or magazines with even less bother. A telephone call to Mrs. Fremier at the library will get the book they need delivered in a day or two.

She said about 15 to 20 people use the service on a regular basis. She also makes a weekly visit to Carmel Convalescent Hospital and Beverly Manor, bringing books for the residents there.

"Sometimes they give me ideas of what they want," Mrs. Fremier said. "Other times they just ask me to pick something out."

She believes there are more people in Carmel who would use the outreach service if they knew about it.

"People who could be using it aren't getting the message," she said. There is no extra charge for the service and the library has large-print books available and books on cassette tapes for those who can't read regular type.

Librarian Jo Childers said the outreach program now concentrates on adult readers.

"It's zooming," she said. "The feedback is just so good."

MRS. FREMIER kicked off the program with flyers, news articles, a television appearance and help from Meals on Wheels to get the word out.

Now, said Mrs. Childers, publicity comes by word of mouth.

Students and shut-ins are not the only ones benefiting from the outreach program. Librarians at both public and private schools around Carmel said many of their book requests come from teachers.

Anne Barrett, librarian at All Saints' Day School in Carmel Valley, said teachers there use "hundreds of the books" in their classrooms.

If an instructor is teaching a section about immigration to the United States, she said, Mrs. Fremier can bring in a wide selection of material the small All Saints' library could not stock.

"It's wonderful help to have the outreach from Harrison," she said.

The school also gets an informal book review service from the program. If a number of students request a particular book for research or pleasure, Mrs. Barrett said she may buy it for the All Saints' collection.

Mrs. Patchick called outreach "a lifesaver for us." Her budget is tight and the school library just cannot stock the variety available at Harrison Library.

ALLURA FISHBURN, librarian at Carmel Middle School, said the outreach program is "a fantastic way for us to meet the needs of kids who go to the library."

Mrs. Fremier works part time as the outreach director. How much time she will spend on outreach in the future will depend in part on the Harrison Library budget for 1979-80.

Pat Sippel, president of the library board of trustees, said the board will "keep it if we can afford it. We have to see if it serves the public."

ALLENE FREMIER, outreach librarian at Harrison Memorial Library, loads milk crates filled with books into her Volkswagen for delivery to public and private schools in the Carmel district. Mrs. Fremier also will bring books to the homes of people who can't get to the library themselves. (Michael Stang photo)

HOOVER, CARUTHERS, DE YOE ELECTED

Carmel voters followed the national trend and by a landslide margin helped elect Herbert Hoover president.

In local elections, A. A. Caruthers was elected to the Fifth Supervisorial seat and Ray C. De Yoe to the office in the state Assembly. Local county voters approved a $2 million road bond and voted against an ordinance that would ban rodeos.

It was the largest number of voters to turn out for an election in Carmel and they registered decisiveness in the final tally.

Results are as follows: Hoover 842 votes to Smith's 251; Carruthers 701 to 299 for Roberts; De Yoe ran unopposed; 826 for the road bond to 189 against.

THE STONES GO ANY DISTANCE TO VOTE

Some people go to any distance to voice their opinions. In this case, Mr. and Mrs. George S. Stone drove 325 miles in a day to put their mark on a ballot.

They were in Hollywood on Tuesday morning where Stone is registered. However, Mrs. Stone had registered here. So at 6 a.m., Stone hurriedly marked his ballot at his Hollywood precinct while his wife waited impatiently in the car. They drove at a furious pace half the length of the state and pulled in front of her Carmel precinct a few minutes past five where Mrs. Stone marked her ballot.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF A CARMEL BUSINESSWOMAN

First Edition Bookshop owner Miss Baker, said she decided to keep a diary of the daily events that occurred at her Ocean Avenue store.

Her first entry referred to an ex-boxer visiting Carmel with his young daughter. He said he had once been a prize-fighter and had acted as body guard to the Countess Cathcart on her last visit to New York.

The second entry in her diary referred to an empty-headed woman looking for an author. The stylishly gowned visitor called through the door, "Have you any authors?" Miss Baker humored her by asking what kind of author she was looking for.

"Any kind will do," she answered.

She was told there was none in the shop, but she might find one wandering the streets.

"I'm so disappointed, she said. "I was told I would find one in the bookstore."

Her last visitor asked the inevitable tourist question. "Will you kindly direct me to the artist's colony. I've been looking all over town and can't find it."

CARMEL HOOVER CLUB HAS LAST MEETING

The Carmel Hoover Club had its last luncheon Monday at the Pine Inn when 80 members gathered to celebrate the success of its election efforts.

William L. Overstreet, chairman of the club, said its work wasn't over until the polls were closed and the last vote was counted.

Ray De Yoe, assembly candidate, said he believed Hoover's election would be as easy as his. De Yoe is running unopposed.

BOARD TO HEAR PROTESTS ON NEW CHURCH

Opposition to the construction of a Presbyterian church at the corner of Santa Lucia and Scenic Road will be heard by the Carmel Planning Commission on Wednesday.

A petition has been circulated in the neighborhood and signed by residents objecting to the building site. One resident stated displeasure over traffic congestion that would occur on Sundays.

Meanwhile, Pastor Harry Clayton Rogers has conducted services at the Carmel Woman's Club. Thirty people have joined the church.

HEX HITS WITCH PLAY

Actors in Bell, Book and Candle, a play that treats the subject of witchcraft flippantly, believe there is a hex on the production.

Now in its third week of production, two calamities have struck. Its leading man and cat have both had accidents that prevent them from continuing in the play.

George Gordon became seriously ill and was taken to the hospital. He must remain there a week then be confined to his bed for three more.

The same day, the talkative Siamese cat who plays Pyewacket in the show came out on the short end of an encounter with a dog and suffered three broken ribs.

The parts have been recast and the show will go on.

CARMEL MERCHANTS TO OPEN EVENINGS BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Carmel merchants will remain open evenings on the three weekends before Christmas, an unprecedented move in Carmel's commercial history, the Carmel Business Association announced recently.

"We have never before remained open evenings and our action now is certainly not motivated by a desire on the part of association members to commercialize Christmas," Kay Scott, association secretary, said.

Many people are unable to shop here because the store hours are inconvenient, she said.

COUNCIL APPROVES NEW SEATS FOR SUNSET CENTER

The Carmel City Council allotted $33,000 from the city's budget toward new seating for Sunset Auditorium at last night's meeting.

Purchase of the 714 seats also will be funded through private donations, Cultural Commissioner Ashton Stanley said. Private financial support also would be used to make other Sunset Center improvements, he added.

Robert Bottorff

Robert I. Bottorff, 71, a Carmel resident for six years since he retired from a 40-year career with the Wall Street Journal, died on Wednesday of last week at Beverly Manor Convalescent Hospital following a brief illness.

Bottorff joined the newspaper just 12 days after the 1929 stock market crash and rose to become executive vice president and general manager of Dow Jones and Co., publisher of the national business newspaper.

Born in Columbus, Ind., he attended De Pauw University and was a member of the Sigma Delta Chi and A.T.O. fraternities.

His classmate Bernard Kilgore offered him the first job at the Journal. Kilgore later became president of Dow Jones and Co.

Bottorff rose to San Francisco bureau news editor in 1931 and managing editor of the West Coast bureau in 1940. He spent four years as managing editor of the Midwest bureau in Chicago before going to New York as managing editor of the main office. He later also served as executive editor of the Journal.

A member of the Monterey Peninsula Country Club, Bottorff lived in the Carmel Meadows area since 1972.

Survivors include his widow Ande; daughters Susan Shreve of Carmel, Sally Walters of Pacific Grove, and Catherine B. Arnold of Leavenworth, Ind.; son Peter Bottorff of Vestal, N.Y.; sister May Bottorff of Columbus, Ind.; brother Wilfred Bottorff of Costa Mesa; and seven grandchildren.

Private cremation was at the Little Chapel by the Sea under the direction of Paul Mortuary. No funeral services are planned. The family suggests that any memorials be sent to the Monterey Peninsula Buddhist Temple in Seaside.

Margaret Kovacevich

Margaret J. Kovacevich, a 26-year Carmel resident, died Friday after she collapsed at a restaurant. She was pronounced dead at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. She was 63.

Born in Berkeley, Mrs. Kovacevich left the San Francisco Bay area in 1952, opening a woman's apparel shop in Carmel with her late husband, Robert Mason. Mason died in 1958. She sold the store, Mason's, on Dolores Street, in 1969.

She is survived by her husband, Nicholas Kovacevich of Carmel, whom she married in 1963; a stepson, Glenn Kovacevich of Chicago; two sisters, Ann Jepsen and Dorothy Appel, both of Concord, and her father, Frank Jepsen of Concord.

The family suggests memorial contributions go to the charity of the donor's choice.

Robert A. Bannister

Robert Arnold Bannister, of Hacienda Carmel, died on Tuesday of last week after an apparent heart attack. Bannister, 65, was dead on arrival at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

Born in Sacramento, he was a graduate of the California Maritime Academy, and was employed for three years by the Matson Navigation Co. before joining Pacific Gas and Electric Co. Bannister retired as a division superintendent with PG&E's coast valley division in 1970.

Bannister was a member of the Oakland Masonic Lodge, the Rotary Club of Castroville and was the former president of the board of directors for Hacienda Carmel.

He is survived by his widow, Georgia Bannister of Carmel Valley; a sister, Mrs. Glenwood Bockman of Stockton, and a granddaughter, Carol Bannister of Visalia.

The family suggests memorial contributions be made to the Community Hospital heart fund.

Ruby F. Smith

Ruby F. Smith, a resident of the Tierra Grande area of Carmel Valley, died on Monday of last week after a long illness. She died at the home of friends in Prunedale where she and her husband had been living recently. She was 54.

Mrs. Smith was born in Fullerton.

She is survived by her husband, Meekley Smith of Carmel Valley; a son, David Smith of Alameda; sisters Jean North of Costa Mesa and Betty McGee of Pennsylvania; and her mother, Louva Elizabeth Chastain of Long Beach.

Riverbank dwellers not worried

Flood protection won't be finished until January

By KEN PETERSON

LAST WINTER, the California drought ended with a deluge that swelled the Carmel River and caused serious erosion along portions of its banks. Several homeowners watched their backyards wash away in the tide during February flooding.

Nearly nine months later, only one of six federally funded bank protection projects is underway. The $300,000 project in the Meadows Road-Fawn Court area should be finished next week, according to Gene Ayers, district director of the federal Soil Conservation Service in Salinas.

The five other projects along the river have completion dates stretching into January, when the rainy season is at its peak.

Delays were caused first because Congress lagged in appropriating money for flood disaster relief. Then local landowners, Monterey County and the Soil Conservation Service disputed who would pay the cost for inspecting the construction work.

The county, citing budget restrictions under Proposition 13, tried to pass the cost on to the property owners. They balked, and eventually the county convinced the federal agency to pick up the tab.

Finally, landowners who would not benefit from the bank protection work were slow to grant river access to construction crews.

The problems are resolved and Ayers said the projects are finally going to bid.

HOMEOWNERS AROUND Meadows Road say they are satisfied that the work will protect their property this year. As for those in the other five areas from Boronda Road to Rancho Canada Golf Course, Ayers said the weather will determine what work is completed before the river rises again.

"We'll be better prepared for the water to rise than those homes have ever been," said Jim Cowley, a Fawn Court resident who watched his yard dissolve last winter. He now has a steep cliff behind his house coming up to the edge of his swimming pool.

"I have all the confidence in the world that we won't see the terrible erosion that's taken place on that bend of the river over the last 20 years," he said.

Bill Brown lost two eucalyptus trees on his Meadow Road property last year, but he said he believes the bank protection work will "do good for us."

Brown feared the improvements on the north bank of the river could speed erosion on the opposite side.

"It will affect the hell out of the people across the way," he said.

LONG-RANGE SOLUTIONS to flooding remain few and far between. The Carmel River is in private hands, owned jointly by property owners along its banks. It is not controlled by a reclamation district responsible for levees or other constructions to stabilize the channel.

Monterey County, the state Department of Fish and Game and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) exercise minimal control over grading by private citizens in the riverbed and along its banks.

There is little consideration given to the effects grading may have elsewhere along the river.

"Whether it will cause additional flooding upstream or downstream, nobody looks at that," said Joe Madruga of the county flood control department. "It's a civil matter."

If one landowner thinks someone's grading caused erosion on his land "they can take them to court," Madruga said.

Ayers said the Soil Conservation Service takes this into account in its own projects. The service, he emphasized, does not realign the river channel or its banks.

"We just put it back the way it was," he said.

Ayers said the service recognizes that other grading work could affect their projects, but builds its protections strong enough to withstand the pressures.

One way to limit property damage caused by riverbank erosion is to limit construction along the Carmel River. Supervisor Sam Farr asked last spring for the county to proceed as rapidly as possible with floodplain zoning along the river.

But restrictive zoning is still three to four years away, according to Bob Binder, assistant county engineer for the flood control district. The county has contracted out the survey work to determine floodplain boundaries on all Monterey County rivers. Assembling the information will take most of the time, Binder has said.

The county now requires only minimum floor heights for buildings in flood-prone areas.

VEGETATION WHICH helps anchor the riverbanks and retard erosion may get some help in the near future. Supervisor Michal Moore of Monterey is negotiating with the California-American Water Co. for a riverbank irrigation system around four proposed new wells.

Irrigation is recommended by Edwin Lee of the Lower Carmel Valley Advisory Committee. He said the high-yield wells draw water away from tree roots, killing the plants and reducing the protection they offer against flooding.

A county study of Carmel River vegetation by the CH2M Hill Co. drew a different conclusion, claiming vegetation does little to slow erosion.

But Moore said he is not using the controversial Hill study and will rely on information available in earlier studies, stream flow records and well pumping reports.

He will recommend some form of sprinkler irrigation linked to the rate of pumping from Cal-Am wells. He expects the utility will accept the system since "I believe I have the swing vote on this" on the board of supervisors.

STEEP BANKS along the Carmel River, east of the Schulte Road bridge, were caused by river erosion. This photograph was shot last winter. Soil Conservation Service projects are aimed at preventing a recurrence of the erosion when the river rises this year. (George T. C. Smith photo)

A WORKER FROM Granite Construction Co. unloads crushed rock to stabilize the Carmel River banks below Meadows Road. The $300,000 project is paid for by the federal Soil Conservation Service. Grading and rock fill in the area are designed to stabilize the banks. Some homeowners along this stretch of the river lost 100 feet of land during high water last winter. (Michael Stang photo)

REAL ESTATE

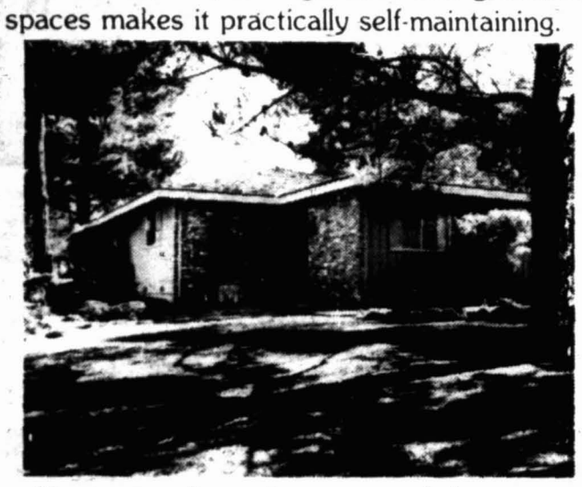
An "L" of a house on Strawberry Hill Road in Pebble Beach

Located on a large corner lot, this house is shaped like an "L". One wing, housing kitchen, dining area, den and garage, stretches along Strawberry Hill Road. The other, including the two generous bedrooms and baths, parallels Sloat Road. The house is set well back from both streets, and its landscaping of tall pines, selected shrubs, rock gardens and gravelled spaces makes it practically self-maintaining.



You enter through a recessed doorway at the center, walled with brick that contrasts nicely with grey vertical siding and white trim. The entrance hall is paved with slate, and a sunny living room with great white stone fireplace opens before you. Corridors extend to right and left, leading down each leg of the "L".

The right hallway brings you quickly to the beautiful den, panelled in cherry-wood, floored with vinyl tile, warmed by a friendly brick fireplace that backs up the living room. A well-equipped wet bar hides in a cherry cabinet, and sliding doors open to the sunny, protected patio inside the "L".

Passing through the den and past a convenient half-bath, you come to the outsized garage with space for golf cart as well as 2 cars. Also in this wing are the long, narrow kitchen with built-in appliances, ash cabinets and tile counters. At its far end, a charming dining area.

The other corridor, lined with closets, leads to two large bedrooms and the two full baths. The master bedroom is 20 x 16, with dressing space at one end and sliding doors to the patio at the other. One wall is panelled in artfully matched, flame grain ash, almost a mural in itself.

All of this is only 2 blocks from the MPCC golf courses, a bit farther from the clubhouse, still relatively near the ocean. The patio is a year-round delight, windless in all weather, warm enough to nourish tropical plants. It's a lovely house for entertaining, a comfortable place for gracious living. The formal address: 3021 Strawberry Hill Road. The price: $159,500.

More 'teeth' sought for two-story house ordinance would amend legislation the council passed Oct. 9. It became law yesterday. That ordinance reduces allowed building height by six feet and tightens site coverage limits in the R-1 residential zone.

The commission and council spent nearly six months assembling the ordinance. But the commission has discovered more loopholes it wants to close. Present restrictions mean homes must be shorter and smaller than before. Still, the commission wants a last look at new two-story homes.

Beside the design review and on-site parking requirements, the proposal also:

- Requires on-site parking for new or remodeled guest houses.
- Requires design review of fences not made of wood.
- Reduces slightly allowed site coverage of second stories on two-story homes. Second stories on 8,000-square-foot lots may cover no more than 27 per cent of the lot under the new ordinance. The present limit is 31 per cent.

Two commissioners expressed doubts about the design review clause. But neither has taken an official position.

"The serious question I have is whether design review should be involved in every two-story building in Carmel. To put these design ideas into a commission's mold, at the end, sounds to me a little bit dangerous," said Davidson.

"I'm not sure," Stephenson replied when asked for his opinion of the design review proposal. Under adequate R-1 restrictions, Stephenson said he was "not certain" that design review would be necessary.

The commission's land use subcommittee is scheduled to review the proposal Friday. It will make recommendations to the full commission. Davidson sits on the subcommittee along with Sandy Swain and Eileen Thompson.

Uninhabited garages underneath one-story homes would not be subject to design review under the proposal, according to Robert Griggs, the Carmel planning director. But remodeled homes would require review.

"Large house" grievances have been at issue before city panels for nearly a year. The council, the City Hall staff and the building department have all been blamed for the large houses. One "large house" is owned by James Hopkins on Casanova between Ninth and 10th. Another large home the council has examined is owned by Nick Marotta at Ocean and Carpenter.
